Stipulation in state court order

Federal court, in accounting suit, properly refused to reopen case to permit complainant to dispute stipulation in order of state court in receivership proceeding.—Williams v. New York Zinc Co., C.C.A.N.Y., 29 F.2d 167.

Decision on similar issue

Where arguments in support of unfair competition by plaintiff were originally advanced before another judge on defendants' claim of infringement by plaintiff, which arguments were rejected by such other judge and same arguments were urged in support of claim for unfair competition, court would not grant relief for unfair competition, notwithstanding adjudication of noninfringement by such other judge was not decisive on issue of unfair competition.—Millburn Bills v. Meister, D.C.N.Y., 37 F.Supp. 231.

Order of de facto judge judicial in their character, such as rulings on questions of law, or law and fact,[88] and not to purely administrative orders of the court,[89] such as allowances of compensation.[90] It does not bind a judge to follow the reasons given by the earlier judge.[91] Furthermore, a ruling on a preliminary motion to the jurisdiction[92] or denying a motion to dismiss the complaint[93] does not prevent another judge from announcing a contrary conclusion required by the fully developed evidence; and a ruling on a motion attacking an original pleading does not preclude another judge from ruling otherwise on a motion attacking the pleading after it is amended.[94] A cogent reason justifying a decision different from that made by another judge in the case is a certainty that the earlier ruling was erroneous;[95] and another cogent reason justifying a departure from the general rule is a conclusion reached by the second judge that the court has no jurisdiction either of the parties or of the subject matter.[96] In an equity suit, where the judge who heard the case on the merits died without handing down any decision, and the parties agreed to resubmit the case on the transcript of testimony, exhibits, and briefs, the judge considering the case on resubmission was authorized to disregard rulings of the deceased judge as to competency of the evidence, and could consider evidence rejected by him.[97] Failure of the trial judge to require proof of matters alleged in an amendment to the pleadings does not operate to vacate an order of a previous judge requiring the amendment.[98]

Where a judgment is entered by a court of competent jurisdiction, with respect to a matter in controversy before it, such judgment is binding on the parties and may not be reviewed by another court of coördinate jurisdiction.[99] Accordingly, neither the district court nor the circuit court of appeals may, in effect, by enjoining the collector of customs from assessing a special duty, reverse a decision of the court of customs and patent appeals.[1]

§ 360. Transfer of Causes

The right or duty to transfer a particular cause from one district court to another, or from one division or place of holding court within a district to another division or place within the district, depends on the controlling statute; and the right to transfer may be waived.

In the absence of statute or authority, the federal district court of one state cannot transfer an action to the federal district court of another state in order to save dismissal of the action.[2] A statute requiring that where a district judge is disqualified the case must be transferred to another district requires such transfer where the judge of the district wherein the case was pending was disqualified because of family and friendly relations with a party.[3] Under a statute providing that a proceeding shall on application of the claimant be removed to any district agreed on by stipulation between the parties, the consent of a party's attorney is in effect a stipulation; and, in the absence of any statutory provision to the contrary, the proceeding may be transferred by stipulation more than once.[4] In the absence of statute, a district court sitting as a court of admiralty is without power to transfer a case to a district court sitting as a court of law or equity;[5] but in a proper case a district court which, sitting as a court of law, has no jurisdiction of a cause may transfer it to the admiralty docket.[6] It sometimes happens, especially in administration matters, that a cause is commenced in a consular court under the belief that it involves less than five hundred dollars, and is afterward found to involve more; in that event it is transferred and the prior proceedings are treated as having been conducted under its authority.[7]

In view of the rule stated supra § 303 that a district court has jurisdiction throughout, and territorially coextensive with its district, and may competently do in one division or at one seat things pertaining to the business in another, the court may, for proper reasons, transfer cases for trial and disposition from one division of the district to another,[8] as where the case is by inadvertence made returnable in a division other than that in which defendant resides;[9] but there is authority holding that the court is without power to grant a motion based on improper venue of the action to transfer the case from one division of the court to another.[10] Judicial Code §§ 53, 58, 28 U.S.C.A. §§ 114, 119, relative to transfer of causes to another division within the district, is not applicable in the case of a transfer within a district wherein divisions were created by rule of court, but a civil transitory action removed by a nonresident may be transferred to another division created by rule of court within the district.[11] Under the statutory provision authorizing a transfer from one division of the district to another on written stipulation of the parties, consent of both parties is necessary, and where a motion to transfer is opposed by the other party the motion must be denied.[12]

Under a statute providing that causes may be transferred by the court from any of the places in which court shall be held in a certain district to any of the places mentioned in the statute when the convenience of the parties or the ends of justice would be promoted by the transfer, whether the cause shall be transferred rests in the discretion of the trial court, which may transfer a cause on its own motion; and when it does the presumption is in favor of the validity of the order of transfer, and the burden is on the complaining party to establish that there has been an abuse of discretion and that he was prejudiced thereby.[13]

The right to transfer a cause may be waived,[14] and is waived by permitting the cause to remain on submission in the district wherein it was pending when the right accrued.[15]

Compensation or Emolument

In a generic sense, the word implies compensation or salary; but if used in its narrow, distinctive sense it signifies the compensation for particular acts or services rendered in the line of official duties;[6] and it has been defined as a charge fixed by law for the service of a public officer, or for the use of a privilege under the control of the government;[7] a charge for services;[8] a charge or emolument;[9] a fixed charge;[10] compensation;[11] compensation for particular acts or services;[12] compensation for particular services rendered at irregular and uncertain periods;[13] compensation to professional men, a remuneration for services rendered in the line of their professions;[14] every kind of compensation allowed by law;[15] pay or perquisite;[16] a recompense for official or professional services;[17] payment in money for official or professional services, whether the amount be optional or fixed by custom or law;[18] reward, compensation, or wage given to one for the performance of professional services;[19] reward or compensation allowed by law to an officer for specific services performed by him in the discharge of his official duties;[20] reward or compensation for services ren-cise of external severeignty. It alone has the direction of external relations. The independence of each associated state in this respect is sunk in the sovereignty of the federal state."—Molina v. dered or to be rendered.[21] Also, with a slightly different connotation, the amount paid for a privilege,[22] voluntary payment for a particular privilege,[23] or tribute to a superior.[24]

The fee may be for acts or services done or performed, partially done or rendered, or to be done or rendered, or for services rendered at regular periods,[25] especially for personal, professional, or special services;[26] and usually the particular acts or services should be done or rendered in the line of some duty,[27] although in a particular connection, the term has been held broad enough to include ex officio compensation without specific regard to the performance of any particular service;[28] and, as used in some statutes, the word "fees" is not restricted to charges which may be collected by a public official for services rendered by him to the public,[29] while under other statutes it has been held to be so limited.[30] The general rule is that fees should be paid by the persons obtaining the benefit of the acts, or receiving the services, or at whose instance they were done or performed, whether persons or municipalities;[31] the payments should be in money,[32] and are to be made to the person doing or performing the act or services, as the fees of clerks, sheriffs, lawyers, doctors, etc.[33] Specifically, in the case of an official, payment may be made to him for his own use, or for the use of the public.[34] The amount of a fee may be optional, or may be fixed by law, as in the case of official fees, or by custom,[35] especially payment for professional services. Frequently the services rendered are in the progress of a cause.[36]

Depending on the circumstances, the term has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "commission" see 15 C.J.S. p 582 note 15, "costs" see Costs § 1 b note 28, and "percentage."[37] It has been compared or contrasted with, and distinguished from, "allowance" see 3 C.J.S. p 891 note 74, "assessment" see 6 C.J.S. p 1025 note 42, "commission" see 15 C.J.S. p 582 note 20, "compensation" see 15 C.J.S. p 655 notes 52, 58, "costs" see Costs § 1 b notes 29, 30, "disbursement" see 26 C.J.S. p 1329 note 22, "dues" see 28 C.J.S. p 574 note 76, "emolument" see Emolument 30 C.J.S. p 221 note 10, "expenses" see Expense or Expenses 35 C.J.S. p 208 note 29, "gain,"[38] "per diem allowances,"[39] "profit,"[40] "salary,"[41] "tax" see the C.J.S. title Taxation § 1, also

In a mechanical sense, the motion or advance of any material which is being fed to a machine, as of cloth to the needle of a sewing machine; also the material upon which a machine operates, as the grain running into a grinding-mill.[47] The word admits of some ambiguity. The "feed" mechanism is a part of the machine, which clamps and controls the material, and the material, when so clamped, partakes of the movements of the feed mechanism, so that the material may thus be considered a part of the feed.[48]

Phrases employing the word, both as a noun and as an adjective, are set out in the note.[49]

As a Verb

To lend additional support, to strengthen ex post facto.[50]

Phrases employing the verb are set out in the note.[51]

FEEDER. Primarily, one who or that which gives or provides food or supplies nourishment; and specifically one who fattens cattle, especially for slaughter.[52] Applied to the animals themselves, "feeders" are such as are not ready for slaughter but require fattening to place them in condition for consumption.[53]

In a different, but still analogous, sense, a fountain, stream, or channel that supplies a main canal with water.[54]

FEEL. As a noun, a sensation of any kind, or a vague mental impression or feeling,[55] as in the expression, the "feel" of a case.[56]

As a verb, to be conscious of;[57] to have experience of; also, to try by touch; examine by touching with the hands or otherwise.[58] In the latter sense, the term may indicate deliberation.[59]

In a derived sense, the word has been said to be equivalent to "believe" see Believe 10 C.J.S. p 239 in Pocket Parts.

Feeling. A verbal noun, defined as meaning the immediate quality of what is present to consciousness in sensation, desire, or emotion, considered apart from all complication by thought; in a loose use, any content of consciousness, not recognizable as thought or volition.[60] As a mental process, it has been described as a fact, an ultimate fact, and distinguished from "judgment."[61] In the plural, the term is broad enough properly to include both mental and bodily feelings.[62]

law, that is, wickedly and unlawfully;[2] with criminal intent;[3] wrongfully and with the intent of committing a felony or crime.[4] Used in connection with an unlawful and forbidden act, the term signifies that the act was done knowingly and purposely, not accidentally or by mistake.[5] The term imports intent,[6] and a willful act;[7] and has been held to include "maliciously"[8] and "unlawfully."[9]

It may be synonymous with "criminally" see Criminally 24 C.J.S. p 1262 note 1 in Pocket Parts; and has been held equivalent to "fraudulently,"[10] "maliciously,"[11] "purposely," and "unlawfully."[12] It has been compared with, and distinguished from, "unlawfully,"[13] "willfully,"[14] and "wrongfully."[15]

As a technical term in accusations of crime see the C.J.S. title Indictments and Informations § 135, also 31 C.J. p 699 note 7–p 701 note 42.

FELONY. See generally Criminal Law § 6. Necessity of characterizing an offense as a felony, or as committed feloniously, see the C.J.S. title Indictments and Informations §§ 109, 135, also 31 C.J. p 670 notes 27–34, p 699 note 7–p 701 note 42. Particular offenses as felonies see the specific C.J.S. titles discussing such offenses.

FELT. An unwoven fabric of short hair or wool, or of wool and fur, agglutinated or matted together, with the aid usually of moisture and heat, by rolling, beating, and pressure;[16] rabbit fur, the separate hairs of which, when agitated in hot water, congeal as it were into a seamless fabric.[17]

FELTING. That action, or quality, of wool which distinguishes it from hair and which is caused by the tiny hooks or scales on wool, which grip and mat on pressure and contact with other strands;[18] hence the process in making felt by which the fur fibers become interlocked with the wool fibers or with other fibers of fur for their whole length.[19] In this sense, the term has been compared with "sticking."[20]

FEMALE. Comprehensively considered, a generic term, including a variety of species,[21] and defined as meaning the sex which conceives and gives birth to young; also a member of such sex.[22] Applied to the human race, a woman.[23] It is not a word of technical character, and may be substituted by the use of synonymous words, or words which plainly indicate a female, such as "her" or "she" and proper names applied to females only.[24] The term has been compared with "woman."[25]

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[26]

26. Phrases construed
(1) "Female abortionist."—State v. Guaraneri, R.I., 194 A. 589, 592, 593.

FEME or FEMME. A woman;[27] also, a wife, as in the phrase "baron et feme."[28] It was used in the feudal legal nomenclature and in the earlier text-books as properly expressing the feudal theory that the wife was subject to the husband.[29]

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[30]

FEMICIDE. The killing of a woman; also one who kills a woman.[31]

FEMININE. Of or belonging to females.[32]

FENATIO or FEONATIC. In forest law, the fawning of deer; the fawning season.[33]

FENCE. As a noun or as a verb, in its literal or primary sense of a barrier, see the C.J.S. title Fences § 1. As a noun, in a derived sense, applied to those who make a business of receiving stolen property see the C.J.S. title Receiving Stolen Goods §§ 1, 14, also 25 C.J. p 1012 note 16.

As a verb, in old Scotch law, to defend or protect by formalities.[34]

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[35]

FENCE-MONTH or DEFENSE-MONTH. In old English law, a period of time, occurring in the middle of summer, during which it was unlawful to hunt deer in the forest, that being their fawning season. Probably so called because the deer were then defended from pursuit or hunting.[36]

§ 1. Definition and Nature

A fence is an inclosing structure about a field or other space intended to prevent intrusion from without or straying from within.

A fence is an inclosing structure about a field or other space, or about any object, composed of wood, iron, or other material, and intended to prevent intrusion from without or straying from within.[1]

It is nothing more than a line of obstacle, and may be composed of any material which will present a sufficient obstruction.[2] Thus a fence may be constructed of barbed wire,[3] meshed wire,[4] or of wood,[5] boards,[6] rails,[7] or stumps.[8] It may be a hedge,[9] a wall,[10] a trestle,[11] or a ditch[12] or trench[13] of sufficient dimensions.[14]

A navigable or deep watercourse is sometimes deemed to be a fence, or equivalent to or a substitute for a fence;[15] but the rule is otherwise as to a shallow stream that will not, under ordinary circumstances, prevent domestic animals from crossing.[16]

A gate erected in a line of fence is a part of the fence.[17]

Although different in construction,[18] a railroad cattle guard, gap, or pit is in a sense a fence[19] and is deemed a fence within the meaning of some statutes.[20]

Posts merely set around a piece of land cannot be termed a fence;[21] neither can the term "fence" be construed to include a line of posts on which slats are nailed, where they are intended not to inclose or surround a field, but to prevent travelers from turning out of the road and trespassing thereon.[22]

A "division fence" is one dividing contiguous property.[23]

A "partition fence" is a fence on the land between two proprietors, where there is no road, alley, or something else which would prevent erection of such fence.[24]

A "possession fence" is an inclosure made by the lapping of fallen trees, and apparently constructed only for the purpose of indicating a claim to the ownership of the land surrounded thereby.[25]

"To fence" means to inclose with a fence or other protection.[26] To "fence in" a place, as against live stock, means to surround it by a fence, so as to prevent the intrusion of such animals upon the inclosed premises.[27]

Terms distinguished. A "lawful fence" means a fence as defined by statute,[28] while an "ordinary fence" is a common or usual fence.[29] The term "lawful fences" is not necessarily synonymous with the term "ordinary fences,"[30] or "sufficient fences."[31] However, as discussed infra § 14, in applying a statute defining a sufficient fence the terms "lawful" and "sufficient" are necessarily synonymous.

Defined
"Sufficient fences" mean fences such as farmers of practical knowledge and experience would consider as sufficient to protect the crop from injury by usually orderly cattle.—Robison v. Fetterman, supra.
Sufficiency of fences generally see infra § 14.

While, as stated supra this section, a hedge is ordinarily considered a fence, and is so recognized by the statutes of some jurisdictions,[32] it is not a fence within the meaning of some of the statutes relating to fences.[33]

§ 2. Right and Duty to Erect and Maintain in General

As a general rule a landowner may build a fence along the boundary of his property.

It has been held that a landowner has an inherent right to erect a boundary fence along the division line of his property.[34]

§ 3. Statutory Provisions

Statutes exist, in many jurisdictions, dealing with and regulating the erection and maintenance of fences. Fence district laws are considered infra § 4, and statutes dealing with partition or division fences are considered infra § 8. Fencing requirements under the so-called Stock Laws are considered in Animals § 110 b.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 4. —— Fence District Laws

a. In general
b. Taxation

a. In General

Statutes exist providing for the establishment of fence districts, on petition or election by their residents, for the purpose of erecting and maintaining fences.

The statutes of some states provide for the establishment of fencing districts in accordance with the wishes of the residents of such districts, as ascertained by an election or by petition.[35] These statutes generally specify the qualifications of the persons who may vote or sign the petition,[36] the number or proportion of owners who must sign the petition,[37] and the official or officials under whose direction such elections are to be held and by whom the result is to be ascertained and declared.[38]

An election held pursuant to such a statute is not void for mere irregularities,[39] but it has been held that an election held on any other date,[40] or at any other place,[41] than that provided by statute is necessarily void.

The action of the officials in such proceedings is ministerial and not judicial,[42] and consequently they have no power to entertain a counterpetition, or pass on a contest over the result of an election.[43] However, where no review is provided by statute the action of such officials within their jurisdiction is final and conclusive,[44] and the courts have no power to interfere therewith.[45]

It is the province and duty of these officials to declare the result,[46] and if they refuse to declare the result, they may be compelled to do so by mandamus.[47] Where so required by statute, an application to an ordinary or other official acting in a fence district election to examine and count certain returns should be made in writing, distinctly setting forth the grounds of the proceedings desired,[48] and such application should be made before the official declares the result.[49]

Fencing board. Some statutes require members of a fencing board to take an oath of office, to adopt written plans for the construction of a fence, and to file a written report of the cost with a designated county officer. However, failure to take these steps is not a jurisdictional defect, it being waived by a failure to object thereto within the time limited by statute.[50]

Lands included. Under some statutes, land may be annexed to an existing fence district in a manner therein provided,[51] as, for example, by order

51. Validity of statute
Pope's Digest § 5786, authorizing of the county court on compliance with conditions specified in the applicable statute.[52] On compliance with the statutory requirements, the court is under a duty to grant the order of annexation.[53]

After land has been properly added to an existing fence district by annexation, all funds on hand may and should be expended on behalf of the whole district as enlarged.[54]

Where the intent of the statute providing for the creation of fence districts is to benefit persons engaged in agricultural pursuits, or at least a rural population, land in an incorporated town cannot be annexed to a fence district.[55]

Contracts. Although work done in the building of a fence was under a void contract made with the fence district, payments made for such work, in an amount not excessive or fraudulent, could not be recovered.[56]

b. Taxation

Fence districts may be empowered to levy taxes to defray the cost of fences erected by such districts.

The legislature may provide for levying a tax to defray the cost of the fence erected around a fencing district.[57] An assessment under such a statute must conform to the requirements of the act, or it is altogether unauthorized.[58] However, it has been held that a tax will not be defeated for mere irregularities which can be corrected[59] or for failure to follow provisions which are merely directory.[60]

An objection that the assessment does not comply with the petition is not well taken where the change or deviation in the original plans did not increase the length or cost of the fence.[61]

The fact that the money used in construction of the fence is borrowed by the county commissioners on their individual account will not invalidate an assessment.[62]

Amount. In the absence of fraud, an assessment approximately equal to the actual cost is not excessive or illegal.[63]

Apportionment. The tax must be uniformly apportioned on all the assessable realty in the fencing district, irrespective of the amount of fencing required in each county included in the district.[64]

Land taxable. The assessment must be for the benefit of the land taxed,[65] although a presumption exists that the property owners within the fence district will be benefited.[66] Hence, where fencing districts are created exclusively for the benefit of agricultural lands, land located in an incorporated the annexation of "lands near or adjacent to any fencing district organized pursuant to the law," is valid as a general statute, even though authorizing the annexation of lands to a fence district created by special act, such statute not constituting a prohibited amendment of a special or local law.—Barber v. Edwards, 141 S.W.2d 831, 200 Ark. 940.

52. Petition

After denial of petition for annexation of lands to fencing district, on ground that majority in value or acreage of the lands was not represented, second petition could be filed at any time thereafter, involving different lands representing a majority in value of the lands or acreage sought to be annexed, and three of the parties to the first petition could join other parties in the second petition.—Armstrong v. Bull, 144 S.W.2d 707, 201 Ark. 377.

Consolidation of separate petitions

Separate petitions for annexation of territory to fence district were held properly consolidated for hearing.—Norton v. No Fence Dist. No. 2, 26 S.W.2d 878, 181 Ark. 560.

town cannot be included in a fence district for purpose of assessment,[67] nor is the roadbed or right of way of a railroad to be included for such purpose.[68] Likewise coal mines are not subject to assessment for construction of fences, unless the coal bearing land is also useful for agricultural purposes.[69]

Collection and enforcement. In a suit to enforce a fencing assessment as a lien against the property assessed, the description of the land in the complaint, or exhibits attached thereto, must be definite and certain.[70]

Where a statute provides that suits to enforce collection of fencing assessments shall follow the procedure in suits for collection of assessments for local improvements, such provision has reference only to the mode of procedure and does not give the right to tax an attorney's fee.[71] The fees of officers for services in connection with the collection of taxes are governed by the applicable statutory provisions.[72]

§ 5. Right and Duty to Erect and Maintain Partition Fences

A landowner has a right, as a general rule, to build a partition fence on the common boundary of adjoining lands. However, apart from rights and duties which may arise from prescription, agreement, or statute, a landowner is under no obligation to build, maintain, or contribute toward a partition fence.

Ownership of land carries with it the right to erect a division fence on common boundaries of adjoining lands.[73] On the other hand, apart from an obligation to build, maintain, or contribute to a partition fence which may arise by prescription, agreement, or statute, no duty so to do is incumbent on the landowner.[74]

Although a fence actually exists between adjacent lands, it will become a partition fence, and the obligations and rights of the adjacent owners, under the partition fence statutes, will arise only on its being made a partition fence by agreement, or by proceeding in the manner prescribed by statute,[75] unless the jurisdiction is one in which it is provided by statute that all fences constructed or used by adjoining owners as partition fences, unless otherwise specially agreed, shall be deemed partition fences, and shall be built, maintained, and paid for as in the statute provided.[76]

§ 6. —— Prescription or Custom

A duty to maintain a partition fence may arise from prescription or local custom.

The obligation to maintain a partition fence may arise by prescription,[77] or even by local custom.[78] Where, however, a fence is maintained only at intervals, and not continuously during the period of prescription, no prescriptive obligation can arise.[79]

79. Vt.—Carpenter v. Cook, 41 A. 1038, 71 Vt. 110.

A statute as to partition fences will not interfere with an obligation as to the maintenance of such a fence existing by prescription.[80] However, the rule of prescription does not apply in a proceeding by an adjoining owner to recover the cost of erecting a fence under the statute.[81]

Particular portion of fence. It has also been held that the respective owners may become bound by prescription to maintain a specific portion of a partition fence,[82] but there is authority to the contrary where statutory procedure has been set up holding that such obligation can arise only by virtue of the statute or by express or implied agreement.[83] However, from a joint maintenance of a fence by adjoining owners, however long continued, no prescriptive obligation on either of them to maintain a separate and distinct part of the fence can arise.[84]

§ 7. —— Agreement

Valid agreements between adjoining landowners will govern the rights and liabilities of the parties with respect to the erection, maintenance, and repair of partition fences.

The owners of adjacent lands may make valid agreements as to the construction and maintenance of partition fences,[85] even where the subject is regulated by statute,[86] and, as stated in Covenants § 69, the agreement may be in form of a covenant running with the land. In such case, the rights and liabilities of the parties will be measured by the terms of the agreement.[87]

The agreement carries with it, by implication, the right to do such things as are necessary in order to build the fence,[88] and where the agreement mentions no time within which the fence is to be erected, the law implies a reasonable time.[89] So where the width of a partition fence is not stipulated, a reasonable width is implied.[90]

Implied agreement. An agreement to maintain a portion of a partition fence may arise by implication,[91] but an agreement will not be implied against an adjoining owner from mere silence during the erection of a partition fence with his knowledge,[92] nor will any agreement be implied, after his decease, against his son, who is not the owner of the property benefited.[93]

Even if a reference in a deed, in its description of a division line, to a conditional fence may be taken as conclusive proof of an agreement by the parties to erect and maintain a division fence, the ruling will not be extended so as to apply to parts of the division line to which the deed does not so refer.[94]

Persons bound or protected. An agreement between adjoining landowners with respect to a partition fence not constituting a covenant running with the land does not bind a successor in title[95] without notice of the agreement,[96] unless such successor in interest acquiesces therein, either expressly or by implication,[97] nor does it, without an assignment, inure to the benefit of a successor in title not a party to the agreement.[98]

It has been held that the representative of a deceased owner who was a party to a partition fence agreement is not bound for any future repairs under such agreement.[99]

Landlord and tenant. Where a landlord contracts with his adjoining owner to build, maintain, and repair part of a partition fence, his tenant, by virtue of his occupancy of the landlord's land, is bound to the same extent as his landlord.[1] However, a tenant who has agreed to erect a partition fence cannot be compelled to build, and the injured party has no remedy but an action on the agreement.[2]

Where the controlling feature of a contract was the making of fences on specified lines, so that each of the parties should be restored to the possession of pasture held by him under his lease, such provision must prevail over any other general purpose stated by the contract.[3]

Assignability. An agreement to fence is assignable,[4] and the obligation to fence will pass under the assignment of an instrument to which it is incident.[5]

Recording. Notwithstanding a statutory requirement that a partition fence agreement be recorded, an unrecorded agreement is as effectual between the parties thereto as if recorded.[6]

§ 8. —— Statutes

a. In general
b. Persons affected
c. Lands affected

a. In General

Rights and duties with respect to partition fences are usually regulated by statute. The statute ordinarily may be superseded by agreement of the parties.

The duty to erect and maintain partition fences, and all matters connected with their erection and maintenance, are usually regulated by statute.[7] Before a duty to build, maintain, or repair a partition fence can arise under such a statute, the conditions imposed thereby must be complied with.[8]

These statutes do not impose an absolute requirement to build and maintain such fences and the parties may dispense with them if they so agree.[9]

The statutory remedies for violation of the duties imposed are not exclusive of relief at law or in equity,[10] and may be waived by agreement of the parties.[11] When the statutory provisions have been waived the parties are left to their common-law rights and remedies,[12] and the statutes have no application.[13] However, an agreement, in effect modifying the statutory duties, between predecessors in title, not constituting a covenant running with the land and hence not binding on subsequent purchasers without notice, does not prevent application of the statute and enforcement of rights thereunder.[14]

Constitutionality. Laws regulating the building and maintenance of partition fences are enacted in the exercise of the police power and are sustained as constitutional.[15]

Construction. Partition fence statutes have been accorded both a strict construction, as in derogation of the common law,[16] and a liberal construction.[17] However, substantial compliance with their requirements has been held both necessary and sufficient.[18]

These statutes must be construed with reference to the conditions which existed at the time of their adoption and which called them into existence.[19]

b. Persons Affected

Partition fence statutes confer no rights or duties except between owners or occupiers of adjoining land or those holding under them.

Partition fence statutes confer no rights or duties, except between the owners or occupiers of adjoining lands and those who hold under them.[20] The statutes vary in the different jurisdictions, some conferring rights[21] and imposing duties[22] only on the occupiers of adjoining lands, while others are construed to render the remedies provided available either to the owner or occupier of one tract of land[23] against either the owner or occupier of an adjoining tract.[24] To be an occupant in the sense of these statutes, a person must be in possession and have the use and control of the land, with the right to make erections, merely living and boarding on the premises being insufficient.[25]

Although an owner is not liable under statute to an adjoining owner for erection or repairs of a partition fence, yet if he consents, as owner, to the erection of the fence by the adjoining owner, he is estopped from denying his liability.[26]

The grantee of one who has built a partition fence succeeds to the right of his grantor to enforce contribution from the adjoining owner or occupier;[27] but there is contrary authority to the effect that the statutory right of contribution is a chose in action which is not assignable.[28] An administrator is not personally liable in an action under a statute which provides that when one of the owners of adjoining lands neglects to build his proportion of a partition fence the person injured thereby may build it and recover therefor.[29]

c. Lands Affected

The statutes vary with respect to the lands coming within their scope.

The partition fence statutes differ with respect to the kind of lands coming within their scope. Some apply only to agricultural lands and do not require fences between urban lots,[30] while others apply to all fences, those in towns and cities as well as those in the country.[31] Generally, statutes on the subject apply only to lands that are inclosed,[32] or to lands that are occupied,[33] or apply only to lands that

"Inclosed by fences" construed
The term, "inclosed by fences," in statute requiring occupants of adjoining lands so inclosed to maintain partition fences, while both continue to improve lands, does not mean improved lands only, nor uninclosed lands once inclosed.—Carey v. Schweitzer, 134 A. 52, 3 W.W.Harr., Del., 211.

Full or partial inclosure
(1) Under some statutes fence viewers can order partition fence even though neither parcel is fully inclosed with fences.—Deane v. Garniss, 200 N.E. 923, 294 Mass. 221.

(2) Under others if only part of adjoining premises is inclosed or improved partition fences can be compelled only as to such part.

Several lands occupied in common
Under statute authorizing fence viewers to require partition fence where land belonging to two persons in severalty has been "occupied in common" without partition fence, parcels of land owned in severalty are "occupied in common" if no partition fence exists that would prevent are improved,[34] but some are construed to apply only to lands which will be benefited by the fence.[35] Where particular statutes of a jurisdiction are limited to improved or inclosed lands, other statutes of the same jurisdiction dealing with the same subject may be construed to apply only to wild or unimproved lands.[36] Some of the statutes apply to all lands whether inclosed or uninclosed, cultivated or uncultivated, or wild or wood lot.[37]

Occupation within the meaning of such statutes, means use such as to make it advantageous, for the purpose of such use, to fence; actual residence on the land is not required.[38]

Land is under improvement when used to good purpose or turned to profitable account.[39] Thus land which is used or occupied for pasturage[40] or buildings,[41] is considered improved, but land occupied by public buildings and open to public use is not within the requirement of such statutes.[42]

Lands separated by lane. Where a public lane separates the lands of two owners, one cannot be compelled to fence under a statute requiring owners who improve adjacent lands to fence,[43] and substantially the same rule has been applied to lands separated by a private lane or a pent road on the land of both owners.[44] However, the duty of adjoining owners to fence is not altered where such a pent road is wholly on the land of one and contiguous to the other.[45]

Under the express terms of some statutes requiring the building of partition fences, an owner of a right of way used as a farm outlet is included.[46]

§ 9. —— Termination of Duty

A statute or agreement covering the matter will determine when and how the duty to erect or maintain a partition fence will terminate. Unity of ownership of adjoining lands in one person will terminate such duty.

When a statutory method of terminating the obligation as to partition fences is prescribed, the obligation continues until such method has been complied with,[47] and if the duties with respect to the erection and maintenance of such a fence are covered by an agreement of the parties, it will control their duration and termination.[48]

One at whose solicitation a division fence was apportioned after the adoption of a herd law, and who with the adjoining owner acquiesced in the apportionment and erected a fence accordingly, cannot afterward of his own motion relieve himself of the obligation to keep his portion of the fence in repair.[49]

Permitting land to lie in common. Where one of the adjoining owners chooses to let his land, or a part of it, lie in common, he may do so, and be relieved of his corresponding obligation to contribute to the maintenance of a partition fence.[50] This may be done even though the land has been inclosed and improved, and an assignment made,[51] provided he gives the adjoining owner due notice of his intention.[52]

Unity of ownership. Unity of ownership of adjoining lands acquired by one of the owners, on whom the duty to repair a partition fence rested, destroys such obligation.[53] It is otherwise with respect to a prescriptive obligation on the owner of land to maintain a partition fence who becomes a tenant in common of the adjoining land.[54]

§ 10. Division of Partition Fences between Landowners

The duty of maintaining the entire fence rests on each of the adjoining owners unless there has been a division by agreement or under statutory provisions.

Until there has been a division of a particular fence and assignment of a distinct portion to each party to build and maintain, the duty of maintaining the entire fence rests equally on both of the parties, and neither can allege neglect on the part of the other.[55] In such case each party has a right to build and maintain such portions of a fence, or all, as he sees fit,[56] although until a legal division is made no right to any particular portion of a fence can be asserted.[57]

Statutes as to partition fences generally provide that the portions which adjoining landowners shall construct and maintain shall be assigned to them by officials sometimes known as fence viewers, on application made by one of such owners when they cannot agree.[58] The statutes have reference only to cases where the parties cannot or do not agree on a division,[59] but a positive disagreement is not necessary to give the fence viewers jurisdiction, the absence of a binding agreement being sufficient,[60] except perhaps in cases of prescription,[61] Where there has never been a legal division of a partition fence either by agreement or under the statute, the fact that the fence in controversy has been maintained by the respective owners for many years, does not bar adjoining owners from having a legal division under the statute at any time they desire.[62]

A division of the fence by agreement is of the same force and effect as a division by the fence viewers under the statute,[63] and where adjoining owners divide a partition fence for maintenance under the statute, the agreement inures to their grantees.[64]

Whole or partial division. In some jurisdictions it is not necessary to assign the whole of a fence between adjoining owners, a division of a part being legal.[65] In other jurisdictions, however, the statutes contemplate a division of the whole fence and not merely a part thereof.[66]

Equality of burden. The statutes generally contain provisions designed to secure equality of burden, such as provisions that each adjoining owner shall make and maintain one half or a just proportion of the fence, or that the fence shall be divided into equal shares.[67] Some statutes are construed to require each owner to build and maintain a portion that is equal, with reference to the cost and expense of construction and maintenance,[68] or with regard to the conveniences of fencing.[69] To secure equality of shares it is not necessary that the whole portion of the fence assigned to each owner should be contiguous.[70]

Redivision. If the land of one adjoining owner is sold in different parcels after a division of a partition fence, either by agreement or under the statute, so that new coterminous proprietors are introduced, each one extending over a part only of the line so divided, a new adjustment and division becomes necessary.[71]

§ 11. Contribution to Cost of Partition Fences

a. In general
b. Amount or measure of recovery
c. Lien

a. In General

Fence statutes generally permit a landowner to build or repair the entire partition fence on failure of the adjacent owner to build or repair his share, and to enforce contribution.

The statutes generally provide that, where one adjacent owner does not construct or maintain his portion of a partition fence, the other adjacent owner may construct all of it or make all necessary repairs and may recover from the defaulting owner the value of his proper share of such construction or maintenance,[73] after compliance with conditions precedent, as discussed infra § 12. In some states the statutes provide for the construction or repair of partition fences by township trustees at the expense of a defaulting landowner,[74] and some of such statutes provide for assessment and collection of the cost from the affected landowners as taxes.[75]

To authorize recovery under a statute the case must be brought within its terms.[76] Generally, an action to recover contribution cannot be maintained unless the fence is built on the line which divides the premises of the parties, if this is known and undisputed.[77] If, however, parties use a fence as a partition between their lands it is wholly immaterial whether it is on the exact boundary line, so far as the obligation to maintain the fence or contribute to its construction is concerned,[78] and if there is in reality a partition fence, the fact that the line is in dispute does not relieve the adjoining owners from the duty of contributing to its maintenance,[79] nor oust the proper tribunal of jurisdiction to enforce the duty.[80]

Where the owner of land which has been uninclosed incloses it, he is required to pay one half or a just proportion of the value of a partition fence already standing to the owner who erected it.[81] However, the owner of lands which remain uninclosed cannot be charged with the expense of, or be compelled to contribute to, the cost of a partition fence for the sole benefit of his adjoining owner.[82]

b. Amount or Measure of Recovery

Generally half the value of the fence is the limit of recovery. Some statutes, however, permit recovery of double the expense or value of the defaulting owner's portion of the fence or repairs.

Under some statutes the amount recoverable extends to, and is limited by, one half of the value of the fence,[83] the value of the fence in the condition in which it is found, rather than the cost or worth of the materials and labor entering into its construction or repair, being controlling.[84] Other statutes, however, allow the party building the entire fence to recover all the damages arising from the neglect of the other.[85]

Where the value of the fence determines the amount of contribution, some courts hold that half thereof may be recovered, although it is a better or more expensive fence than would have satisfied the requirements of the statute,[86] while others hold that contribution can be enforced only for a legally sufficient fence.[87] At any rate one who builds or repairs a fence must act reasonably, and has no right to be extravagant either in materials or work.[88]

Rebuilding. No recovery can be had for the cost of unnecessary rebuilding.[89]

Double value. In some jurisdictions, by statute, a landowner who builds such part of a fence or makes such repairs as the adjoining owner should have built or made may recover from the owner who is in default double the expense or value of his portion of the fence or repairs.[90] Such statutes being penal as well as remedial are strictly construed, and will not be extended to cases not clearly within their provisions;[91] and all proceedings prescribed by such statutes must be strictly followed.[92]

c. Lien

The amount recoverable from a defaulting landowner under the fence statutes is sometimes made a lien on his land.

Some of the fence statutes provide that the expenses of building or repairing a fence shall be a lien on the land of the owner who is in default.[93] Such a statute is a proper exercise of the police power inherent in the state.[94] Some of these statutes have been construed as not applying to division fences existing under agreement or by prescription,[95] and as not conferring a lien for repairs.[96]

§ 12. —— Actions to Enforce

a. Nature and form
b. Conditions precedent
c. Procedure

a. Nature and Form

Ordinarily contribution with respect to a partition fence may be enforced in a law action.

Contribution between adjoining landowners with respect to a partition fence may ordinarily be enforced in a civil action,[97] legal in nature. An action brought under a statute to enforce contribution for building or repairing a partition fence is legal in its nature,[98] except where the action or proceeding is one to enforce a statutory lien, in which case it is one in rem,[99] calling for the exercise of the equity powers of the court.[1]

b. Conditions Precedent

All preliminary steps prescribed by the statute must ordinarily be taken before an action to recover contribution will lie.

Unless the obligation sought to be enforced rests on a deed,[2] or on agreement,[3] all preliminary steps prescribed by the statute,[4] as, for example, proceed-

4. Notice to build

Costs of erecting partition fence by township trustees could not be assessed against landowner, where notice of request to landowner and trustees to build fence was not made by adjoining owner but by adjoining owner's son, and there was no showing that son was authorized so to act.—Rhodes v. Dunn, 19 N.E.2d 876, 106 Ind.App. 367.

Estimate of probable cost

Where township trustees failed to furnish landowner estimate of probable cost of construction of partition fence requested by adjoining owner, and failed after construction of fence to furnish him statement of actual cost incurred, cost of erecting fence

ings prescribed for the determination of the value of the fence or of other matters by the fence viewers, discussed supra § 10 and infra § 13, must be taken before an action will lie to recover contribution.[5]

These rules, however are not universally adopted. Thus the appointment of viewers, although provided for by statute, has been held not a condition precedent to recovery.[6] It has also been held that, although the parties have by agreement fixed the part of a division fence each is to keep in repair, a finding by the fence viewers, as provided by statute, of the necessity of repairs or rebuilding is a condition precedent to recovery from the defaulting owner.[7]

Where the statute makes no provision for fence viewers, an appraisal by them is not necessary to entitle an adjoining owner to maintain an action for the recovery of the expense of building or repairing a partition fence.[8]

Demand. Under some statutes before bringing an action against the defaulting owner a demand for the amount claimed to be owing by him, as shown by the award of the fence viewers if such an award is necessary, must be made.[9] The demand need not include a detailed statement or itemized account of costs and expenses.[10] The exhibition to the delinquent of the proper certificate, accompanied by a request of payment of the amount, is a sufficient demand.[11]

Consultation with adjoining owner. Where a statute provides for proceedings to enforce contribution in case the adjoining owners cannot agree, and to determine the amount to be paid by each, there is no implied condition precedent that the moving party must consult the other concerning the kind of fence to be built and probable cost, before building, in order to recover therefor.[12]

Time of suit. Under a statute providing for recovery unless the cost is paid within "one month after demand," an action commenced before the expiration of a month after demand for payment is prematurely brought.[13]

c. Procedure

In actions to enforce contribution with respect to a partition fence, plaintiff must allege and prove such facts as entitle him to recover. An action to recover double the expense of the fence is triable by a jury, but not an action to foreclose a statutory lien.

Plaintiff's pleading must contain sufficient allegations of compliance with conditions precedent[14] and of defendant's duty to build or repair.[15]

Where the action is brought under a statute which fixes the rights and duties of the parties, general allegations bringing the case within the statute are sufficient.[16] However, provisos not contained in the enacting clause of the statute need not be negatived.[17]

An action to enforce a statutory lien being one in rem, see supra subdivision a of this section, the complaint therein need not contain the allegations necessary in an action on contract.[18] However, in could not be assessed against landowner.—Rhodes v. Dunn, supra.

Waiting period after notice

Landowner who begins construction of fence without waiting the required time after notice to the adjoining owner so to do cannot recover contribution, even though the fence was not completed until after such time.—Briggeman v. Corrigan, 198 P. 443, 60 Mont. 205.

Hearing by selectmen unnecessary

Where the statute does not provide for a hearing by the selectmen viewing the fence and ordering its repair, defendant is not required to assert a claim that the fence was not on the boundary line, but may assert such claim when sued for double the cost of the repair because of failure to make such repair.—Millner v. Elias, 125 A. 470, 101 Conn. 280.

Irregularity in proceedings is no defense to action.—Deane v. Garniss, 200 N.E. 923, 294 Mass. 221.

Divisional nature of fence

Under statutes which limit the jurisdiction of the fence viewers to matters relating to repair of a division fence, in an action based on an order for repair of a fence it must be alleged that the fence involved was a division fence.—Millner v. Elias, 125 A. 470, 101 Conn. 280.

an action based on an implied promise to pay, allegations of fact showing such a promise must be made to entitle plaintiff to recover.[19]

Issues, proof, and variance. In an action under a statute, to which defendant pleads a general denial, plaintiff must prove all the facts necessary to recovery under the statute.[20] The proof must establish compliance with the requirements of the statute with respect to proceedings before fence viewers, where such a proceeding is a condition precedent to the action.[21]

The actual interest which the parties have in a fence is a question which cannot arise in an action for contribution brought under some statutes.[22]

Burden of proof. The burden is on defendant to show that his lands are not inclosed and are therefore within a statutory exception.[23]

Admissibility and sufficiency of evidence. Competent evidence on the issues in the case is admissible in an action to enforce contribution with respect to a partition fence. Thus, where an issue in the case is whether the alleged division fence was on the boundary line, evidence on such issue is admissible,[24] it being proper, however, for the court to limit such evidence to proving or disproving that the fence was a divisional fence.[25] In such an action the decision or certificate of the fence viewers is admissible,[26] and, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, is sufficient evidence of the facts recited therein.[27] Properly proved county records in which the certificates are recorded are also admissible.[28]

In jurisdictions where the determination of these matters by fence viewers is not a condition precedent to the action, see subdivision b supra this section, the insufficiency of a fence[29] and the expense of building or repairing it[30] may be established by witnesses who know or can judge what it was.

Trial. An action under statute to recover double the expense of building or repairing a partition fence is triable by jury,[31] but a jury trial is properly denied in an action to foreclose a statutory lien.[32]

Where the action is tried before a jury, questions of fact are to be determined by the jury.[33]

An affirmative finding of fact that defendant's land is not within a statutory exception need not be made,[34] a failure to make any finding being equivalent to a finding that the land is not within the excepted class.[35]

Joinder of municipality. A statute providing that a statutory lien for the expense of building or repairing a partition fence may be collected in the same manner as municipal claims are by law collected does not have the effect of requiring that a municipal corporation shall be made a party to the action or proceeding to enforce the lien.[36]

b. Appointment or election and qualification
c. Powers and duties
d. Proceedings

a. In General

Fence viewers provided for by many statutes to determine questions involving partition fence constitute a tribunal of limited jurisdiction.

The statutes dealing with partition fences frequently provide for determination of questions arising thereunder by officials known as fence viewers. Fence viewers constitute a tribunal of limited jurisdiction,[37] but while their duties and functions are judicial in their nature,[38] they do not constitute a court.[39] Some courts deem their functions to be more analogous to those of appraisers and inspectors, and other boards of that character, than of judges or of courts.[40]

b. Appointment or Election and Qualification

The statutes determine who shall be, and the mode and manner of selecting, fence viewers.

The particular statute involved determines who shall be the fence viewers and the mode and manner of their selection. Some of these statutes provide that certain named local officers, such as township assessors, township trustees, commissioners of highways, or county commissioners, shall be ex officio fence viewers in their respective jurisdictions,[41] and they may also provide for the determination of a particular controversy by a less number than all the viewers in the town or precinct, the selection of the particulars viewers being made by the complaining party on proper notice to the adverse party.[42] Under other statutes, fence viewers are elected as special officers.[43]

As fence viewers are quasi-public officers, proof of their having acted officially is prima facie evidence of their appointment or election and qualification,[44] and the party proceeded against is bound to take notice that they are fence viewers,[45] except in cases where they have been appointed or qualified a short time previous to their action.[46] It is not necessary that their office should be proved by record.[47]

Qualification. At common law, and under statutes not expressly providing what shall constitute disqualification, a fence viewer who is related to one of the parties within the fourth degree, by consanguinity or affinity, is disqualified to act.[48] The parties, however, may waive such disqualification,[49] or the objection that the board of viewers is defectively constituted.[50]

It is essential to the qualification of fence viewers that they take an oath of office,[51] although this requirement may also be waived by failure to object at the time of the hearing.[52] It is not necessary that there should be any record of their taking the oath.[53]

c. Powers and Duties

The particular statute involved determines the powers of fence viewers.

The powers of the fence viewers are determined by the statutes under which they act, there being no uniformity in the statutes in this respect. Dependent on the particular statute involved, fence viewers have been held to have power to assign to adjoining owners their due portions of a fence for erection or maintenance, as discussed supra § 10, to pass on the necessity of a fence,[54] to prescribe the time within which a fence shall be built,[55] to inspect an existing fence,[56] to pass on the sufficiency of a fence,[57] to determine the need for repairs or rebuilding,[58] to determine the value of a fence built wholly by one adjoining landowner,[59] to fix the amount which shall be paid to the owner erecting or repairing the fence by the other owner,[60] and to determine all controversies arising under the statutes relating to partition fences.[61]

Since the powers of viewers are limited strictly to those given by statute, when they exceed those limits their determinations are void.[62] They have no power to require one owner to build a part of the portion of the fence assigned to the other;[63] to apportion fences which are not for any reason subject to apportionment or to conclude the parties by determining a fence to be a partition fence when in fact it is not;[64] or to make an assignment when a previous assignment has been made,[65] or when an obligation to maintain has arisen through prescription or by agreement, as discussed supra § 10. Also, they have not the power to determine the existence of an agreement to maintain a fence or a portion thereof.[66] However, under some statutes they have power to determine disputes arising under an agreement.[67]

Under a power to assign portions of a hedge for maintenance they cannot require each party to trim his own side for the whole distance,[68] and, under a power to direct the repair or rebuilding of a partition fence, they cannot determine an invasion of property rights, by the negligent maintenance of an untrimmed hedge which shades the adjoining owner.[69] Where they have power to fix the value of a fence, they have no power to determine whether such fence has been paid for, in whole or in part, and have no control over the sum to be paid,[70] and where they have power to adjudicate an equal division, they cannot award damages or money values to either owner in order to equalize the division.[71]

They have no authority to settle the rights of title of different claimants of land,[72] nor to establish boundary lines.[73] They are, however, sometimes authorized by statute to designate the line on which a partition fence is to be built, where the boundary line is in dispute or is unknown.[74]

the statute must be observed.[76] Under some statutes, they may act only when the adjoining landowners cannot or do not agree,[77] or when a controversy between them exists.[78] In such case they cannot take jurisdiction if an agreement covering the matter exists between the parties.[79]

Where required by the statute a written request for a partition fence or division thereof must be made by one landowner of the other,[80] and, as discussed infra subdivision d (4) of this section, due notice of the proceedings must usually be given.

Provision is sometimes made for a notice, complaint, or application to the trustees or fence viewers, which constitutes the basis of the proceedings.[81]

(3) Limits on Exercise of Jurisdiction

Fence viewers are ordinarily limited by the purposes stated in the notice or application served on them, or in the notice of the proceedings served on interested parties.

Unless there has been a valid waiver,[82] the powers of fence viewers in a particular controversy are limited by the notice, complaint, or application under which they proceed,[83] and by purposes stated in the notice of the proceedings.[84]

(4) Notice of Proceedings

A proper notice of the time and place of the proceedings by the fence viewers must ordinarily be given to persons whose rights will be affected by such proceedings.

Persons whose rights will be affected by the proceedings of fence viewers must have notice of the time and place of such proceedings,[85] and this is true, although notice is not expressly provided for by statute.[86] However, where the statute does not expressly require notice of the meeting of viewers, it has been held that notice of the insufficiency of the fence is all that is required.[87] So, where a statute expressly requires notice of a meeting to assign shares of a fence to be built, but omits any requirement of notice of a meeting to ascertain the value of the fence, the latter notice is considered unnecessary in some jurisdictions,[88] although required in others.[89]

If a party appears without objecting to want of notice he thereby waives it.[90]

76. Notice to select viewer
Under statute providing that, when a matter is submitted to fence viewers, each party shall choose one, and, if either neglect, after eight days' notice in writing, to make such choice, then the other party may select both, the giving of such notice is a condition precedent to the jurisdiction of the viewers to act.—Kibbat v. Clokey, 263 Ill.App. 410.

77. Kan.—Robertson v. Bell, 14 P. 160, 36 Kan. 748.

78. What constitutes controversy
Where applicant was claiming that plaintiff should build or rebuild a portion of his fence, and this was being resisted, or disputed, this made a "controversy" sufficient to give the fence viewers jurisdiction, under the statute, for the word "controversy" does not necessarily mean an action in court, and because the petition alleges the conclusion that there is no controversy, and this is admitted, such petition does not change the fact that there was a controversy as shown by the record.—Scott v. Nesper, 188 N.W. 889, 194 Iowa 538.

79. Iowa.—Nichols v. Fierce, 212 N. W. 151, 202 Iowa 1358.

act has been imposed on him by the request of the adjoining owner. Until then there can exist, in such case, no such controversy as the statute contemplates. The written request is an essential prerequisite to the creation of the duty the fence viewers may enforce, it is essential to their jurisdiction to act at all. Without it there is nothing of which they could take jurisdiction."—Sinnott v. District Court in and for Clarke County, supra.

Waiver
(1) The absence of the required demand may be expressly waived.—Gavin v. Linnane, 221 N.W. 462, 206 Iowa 917.

(2) Appearance by both parties and presentation of their respective claims constitute a waiver of the requirement.—Morrison v. Kipping, 290 N.W. 59, 227 Iowa 1146.

(3) However, landowners appearing with attorney to object to jurisdiction on ground of no request do not thereby waive the requirement.—Sinnott v. District Court in and for Clarke County, 207 N.W. 129, 201 Iowa 292.

Objection by party instituting proceedings
The party invoking action by the Scott v. Nesper, 188 N.W. 889, 194 Iowa 538.

82. Urging other matters at hearing
Fence viewers have jurisdiction to order a legal division of a fence on a notice served on them by a landowner complaining of the refusal of an adjoining owner to maintain his part of an alleged division fence, where latter denies the existence of a legal division and requests that such division be made, and both parties appear at the hearing and urge their respective contentions on such issue.—Morrison v. Form and contents. The notice must be sufficiently definite to inform the party as to the time and place of meeting and the fences to be passed on.[91] However, proceedings of fence viewers should not be measured with technical nicety as to matters of form, but should be treated with at least the indulgence extended to proceedings before justices of the peace.[92]

Although several matters are to be passed on by fence viewers, one notice is sufficient,[93] but it must embrace all the matters to be considered, or it will be insufficient as to those omitted.[94]

The fact that the notice was prepared by the attorney of one of the parties is immaterial.[95]

Unless the notice is required by the statute to be in writing,[96] an oral notice is sufficient.[97]

Service. Statutory requirements as to the service of the notice must be complied with, service in any other manner being insufficient.[98] If no period is designated, the time of notice must be "reasonable," and merely time enough to enable one to get to the meeting is not sufficient, although a short time would ordinarily suffice.[99]

The service of notice after viewers have met and made their finding and order cannot relate back to give them jurisdiction.[1]

A recital of notice in the return or certificate of fence viewers is prima facie evidence that such notice was given.[2]

(5) View or Hearing

Fence viewers must ordinarily act on a personal inspection.

As stated supra subdivision d (1) of this section, the fence viewers must proceed in accordance with the applicable law. The statutes expressly or impliedly require their determination to be based on personal inspection,[3] but the inspection need not be made by all the members at the same time.[4]

Place of hearing. Under some statutes, when a fence is situated on the line between two towns, the fence viewers of one have jurisdiction to hear a controversy in the other, where the party proceeded against resides.[5] Where fence viewers perform their official acts within their territorial jurisdiction, it is immaterial that the clerical or ministerial work is done elsewhere.[6]

Acting separately or as unit. A determination by fence viewers must be made by them sitting in consultation as a board,[7] at least as to those matters with respect to which there may be an exercise of judgment and a difference of opinion as to the propriety of the course of action about to be adopted.[8]

It is generally held that the action of a majority of the fence viewers is valid[9] where all have been duly notified to act.[10] Some courts hold, however, that the whole number of fence viewers contemplated by statute must act in the absence of evidence of a refusal of one viewer to act or the consent of the parties to the remaining viewers proceeding in the absence of one.[11]

(6) Decision or Order
(a) In general
(b) Order or notice to build or repair
(c) Conclusiveness

(a) In General

The fence viewers are often required to reduce their decision to writing, to record the same, and serve a copy thereof on the parties. Statutory requirements as to the form and contents of the award have been considered directory rather than mandatory, and mere irregularities therein do not invalidate the proceedings.

As a general rule, statutory requirements as to the decision or order of the fence viewers should ordinarily be complied with.[12] However, the courts are inclined to construe the provisions concerning the form and contents of the award as merely directory rather than mandatory,[13] and technical objections to the form of an award are not favored.[14] Mere irregularities in the order do not invalidate the proceedings,[15] and an order is not vitiated because of mere surplusage in its contents;[16] it has even been held that omissions in an award may be supplied by oral testimony.[17]

It is sometimes required that the decision of the fence viewers be reduced to writing,[18] and a copy thereof given to each party,[19] and that it shall be sworn to,[20] unless the oath be waived,[21] and recorded.[22] Since the object of recording is to give notice of the action of the fence viewers, if the party has actual notice of their determination recording is unnecessary.[23] It is not necessary that the report should be prepared and filed at the time of the view.[24]

Some courts hold that, where the decision is recorded it becomes binding on the parties, without delivery of copies thereof to them,[25] but other courts hold that recording is not equivalent to delivery of a copy.[26]

The report need not be signed by all the fence viewers at one time,[27] and even the fact that it is not signed has been held not to invalidate it.[28]

Under some statutes an award is void which does not declare the fence built by the complaining party to be sufficient,[29] but under other statutes the rule is otherwise where the fence has never been divided and the proportion which each party should maintain is in dispute.[30]

When the dispute is as to the value of the fence and the proportion thereof which one party should pay to the other, the award should specify such sum,[31] or, at least, data from which the sum is ascertainable.[32] An award is not void for failing to specify whether the value fixed is the actual or double value, if it appears from the whole award which is meant.[33] However, an award is void which, under a statute requiring an assessment of the "expense" of building a fence, finds its value.[34]

(b) Order or Notice to Build or Repair

The order to build or repair a fence should ordinarily state the need therefor, assign respective shares, and fix a time for compliance.

If the fence viewers find that a partition fence or repair thereof is necessary, the order should state the need[35] and assign to each of the parties his respective share,[36] and fix the time for compliance[37] definitely.[38] It has been held, however, that omission to designate the time for compliance is not a fatal objection, a reasonable time being implied.[39] The mailing of notice which is not received until after the time fixed therein for repair or rebuilding is insufficient, where no evasion or attempt to prevent receipt of the notice is shown.[40]

A notice to repair need not specify the particulars in which the fence is deficient;[41] but it should specify the portion of the fence to be repaired, where the notice would otherwise be ambiguous.[42] An order requiring a delinquent owner to repair his part of a division fence is not void because it makes no reference to the condition of the other part, for which the adjoining owner is responsible.[43] Reasonable certainty is all that is required in the description of a fence in such notice.[44]

In some jurisdictions, where a written notice requiring the building of a fence has been served on a delinquent, parol evidence of its contents cannot be given without notice to him to produce it;[45] but in other jurisdictions the contrary rule prevails.[46]

(c) Conclusiveness

Unless impeached for fraud or mistake, or set aside on appeal, the order of the fence viewers is usually conclusive as to matters within their jurisdiction.

The decision of fence viewers on questions within their jurisdiction is conclusive,[47] unless impeached for fraud or mistake,[48] or set aside on appeal, as discussed infra subdivision d (7) of this section. Thus the determination of the viewers as to the amount of fence to be built and maintained,[49] or as to the sufficiency of a fence already built,[50] is conclusive. So a decision against the establishment of a fence on the ground that the land is uninclosed is binding on the parties until it is otherwise determined on a new application.[51]

Where one party is bound by a covenant in a deed to maintain the whole of a fence, an apportionment by viewers does not conclude the other party[52] who will not be estopped from asserting such obligation, although he assented to the apportionment.[53]

Effect on grantees. Under some statutes the order properly recorded binds subsequent grantees of the land, unless the land ceases to be used for revenue or benefit.[54]

(7) Fees and Costs

Costs and fees in proceedings before fence viewers are usually regulated by statute.

The amount of the fees of fence viewers, liability therefor, and collection thereof are matters regulated by statute.[55] Where the costs are fixed by statute, and the viewers have no discretion with reference thereto, the imposition of costs on defendant cannot affect the validity of the report.[56] Fence viewers have no right to include the fees of the township clerk in their assessment.[57]

After appeal. Where plaintiff, on appeal from the order of viewers, is successful in having the order set aside and in having an additional portion of the fence assigned to defendant, half of the costs before the viewers and all of the costs on appeal should be taxed against defendant.[58]

(8) Appeal

Under some statutes an appeal may be taken from a decision of the fence viewers, the appeal sometimes being tried as an action at law.

The right to appeal from the decision of fence viewers is sometimes expressly provided by statute. Under a statute authorizing appeals in "qui tam and other actions for forfeitures and penalties," appeal lies from the action of justices of the peace acting as fence viewers;[59] and, where a statute provides for the entry of judgment by a justice of the peace ex parte on a fence viewers' award if it is not paid within a certain time, an appeal lies from such judgment as from other judgments of such courts, the proceedings being an "action" within the code and a judicial rather than a ministerial act.[60] Whether a landowner was assessed by fence viewers with the cost of a more expensive fence than the law required must be decided on appeal and not on certiorari to review their proceedings.[61]

The appeal must be taken within the time prescribed by statute,[62] and, where a bond is required, it must be duly furnished or the appeal will be dismissed.[63] An appeal will not be dismissed because witness' fees were paid by the party appealing.[64]

Trial de novo. Under some statutes the appeal is triable as an action at law.[65] Unless waived,[66] a jury may be demanded therein,[67] and the question submitted to it for its determination.[68] In such a trial it is not error for the court in its instructions to the jury to recite the proceedings before the fence viewers, provided it does not refer to the findings of the viewers otherwise than by an instruction that the findings are not to be considered as evidence by the jury.[69]

§ 14. Sufficiency of Fences

What constitutes a sufficient fence is often specified by the statutes. Apart therefrom, a sufficient fence is one which will turn ordinary stock.

In the absence of an applicable statute defining what constitutes a sufficient fence, the rule is that a fence which will turn ordinary stock is a good and sufficient fence;[70] it is not necessary that it turn stock which is breachy or peculiarly vicious and prone to break fences.[71]

Where a division line fence is not required to be built of any particular height or size, or of any particular materials or particular style, it must be so built as to size, height, character, and kind of materials that it will be proper and suitable for all the purposes of such fence, and will be reasonably safe, and not necessarily cause injury to the adjoining owner or his property or animals.[72]

The law does not require that fences shall be constructed of fine materials,[73] or that they shall be attractive in appearance.[74]

Statutory provisions. What constitutes a sufficient or lawful fence is sometimes prescribed by statute.[75] Statutes of this character are not necessarily applicable to all fences or in determining all classes of liability claimed to arise from failure to construct or maintain a proper fence.[76] In a case where the statute is applicable land must be

Findings as to nature of fence
In action arising over dispute as to maintenance of partition fence, evidence warranted judgment requiring defendants to maintain that portion of fence which town trustees as fence viewers had ordered defendants' predecessor in title to maintain, in view of finding supported by evidence that fence was a line fence running parallel to private driveway on defendants' property and not a fence on a public highway.—Trustees of Van Meter Tp., Dallas County v. "We do not think these statutory regulations were intended to entirely supersede the common-law standard of what should constitute a sufficient fence in determining the question of liability based upon negligence on the part of the owner of trespassing stock, but were designed inclosed by a fence of the character described,[77] or at least by an inclosure equivalent, in its capacity to turn stock, to the statutory fence,[78] substantial compliance with the statute, however, being sufficient.[79] Thus, where the statute prescribes the manner of constructing barbed wire fences, one constructed otherwise is not a lawful or sufficient fence.[80]

A statutory prohibition of the use of barbed wire in certain cases must be obeyed in such cases, and such only, as come within its terms.[81]

The height of a lawful fence being prescribed, the average height cannot be considered in determining its sufficiency; it is immaterial that it is higher in some places if it is lower in others.[82] An immaterial variation from the statutory height will be disregarded; substantial compliance with the statute is all that is required.[83]

Delegation of regulation to towns. The legislature may delegate to towns the power to make their own regulations as to the sufficiency of fences.[84] However, an unreasonable ordinance enacted by a city or village in the exercise of legislative power to regulate fences delegated to it will be declared void.[85]

Effect of agreement. An agreement for a partition fence which requires a "sufficient fence," without a more particular description, will be held to refer to and adopt the standard prescribed by statute.[86] On the other hand, statutory requirements as to the sufficiency of partition fences may be waived or modified by agreement,[87] or acquiescence in the existence of a fence which does not come up to the statutory requirements.[88]

§ 15. Location and Ownership

a. Location
b. Ownership

a. Location

In the absence of agreement or binding acquiescence to the contrary, a partition fence should in theory be located along the boundary line between adjacent lands. Substantial compliance with this requirement is sufficient, however, and an equal and reasonable amount of each party's land may be used for the erection of the fence.

The statutes providing for and relating to partition fences contemplate fences on the boundary line between the lands of adjoining owners.[89] Hence a fence built by a person on his own land and claimed by him and his grantees as theirs exclusively is not a division or partition fence recognized by statute.[90] However, to constitute a partition fence it is not necessary that it be located precisely on the true line,[91] although substantial compliance with the rule that a partition fence must be located on the line between adjoining landowners is necessary in the absence of an express or implied agreement to locate it elsewhere.[92]

Erection by tenant
Fence, not on true line, erected by tenant for his convenience between tracts of different landlords is not a partition fence.—Shaheen v. Dorsey, 270 S.W. 452, 208 Ky. 89.
Fence several feet from line
Fences located several feet or more from the line have been held

Where landowners expressly agree as to the location of a partition fence,[93] or acquiesce in its location for a long period,[94] or treat it as being a partition fence or on the line,[95] such agreement or acquiescence controls, the fact that the fence is not on the line being immaterial.

Location on lands of both parties. As the line between adjacent landowners is imaginary, existing only in theory,[96] and as every species of fence must take some land and cannot stand on a mathematical line,[97] a reasonable amount of land may be used for the erection of a partition fence, one half of such fence being placed on the land of each of the adjacent owners.[98] Thus crooked or zigzag fences, usually known as Virginia or worm fences, may be built with one half resting on the land of each adjoining owner,[99] unless they infringe the rights of the parties under licenses or agreements.[1]

The occupation by a landowner of the requisite land of his neighbor for the erection of a partition fence is not adverse, but permissive.[2] If more than half of such a fence is built on the land of one of the adjacent owners, without his consent, he is entitled to relief.[3]

The rule which permits partition fences to be placed equally on the land of each adjoining owner does not apply to fences meeting on the front of adjoining premises. Such fences are required to terminate at the division line.[4]

Fence on uneven ground. Since fences must be located along the surface of the ground, whether even or uneven, an order to build a certain number of rods of partition fence is complied with by measurement along the undulating surface, instead of on the level, as in surveying.[5]

Effect of watercourses or ditches. The existence of watercourses or ditches sometimes makes the erection of a partition fence on the boundary between adjoining owners impossible or so expensive as to be practically impossible.[6] Some statutes authorize trustees or fence viewers in such a case to construct or direct the location of a suitable fence elsewhere than on the true line.[7] Where such case is not provided for by statute it must be governed by principles of reason and justice.[8]

In complying with an order of viewers, an owner may extend a partition fence to the terminus of the adjoining owner's, although the fence must be located across a stream, and the water is thereby obstructed to some extent.[9]

Construction of agreement
Where the controlling feature of a contract was the making of fences on specified lines, so that each of the parties should be restored to the possession of pasture held by him under his lease, such provision must prevail over any other general purpose stated by the contract.—Tomkins v. Smith, 193 P. 558, 69 Colo. 271.

Duration of agreement by tenants
Where lessees of adjoining lands stipulated each to build a certain amount of fence, it must be presumed that they intended that such fences would stand during the term of their leases, or at least for a reasonable time, and one of them could be enjoined by the other from changing the fence lines as established by the contract, the fences having been built.—Tomkins v. Smith, supra.

The general statutory duty of trustees, in certain cases, to construct partition fences does not require them to erect a floodgate across a creek, over which the line of fence is located,[10] although the right and duty of the trustees to erect a floodgate exist under statutes expressly dealing with a situation where a creek or ditch makes impossible the erection of a partition fence along the dividing line.[11]

Rebuilding. Where a partition fence which was not on the true line is rebuilt, it may be correctly located.[12]

b. Ownership

A partition fence is generally the joint property of the adjoining owners.

A fence which is entirely on the land of one person and which is not a partition fence by virtue of agreement, prescription, or statute belongs to the owner of the land on which it rests.[13] This is true even where the fence was erected by another person,[14] unless the latter acted in good faith under a misapprehension as to the location of the boundary line and with the consent, express or implied, of the owner of the land on which the fence is built,[15] or unless the case comes within a statute protecting a person who builds a fence on the land of another before the establishment of a boundary line by the county surveyor.[16]

Although a division fence may belong entirely to one owner,[17] as where it was built by him and he has not been reimbursed for one half the value thereof by the adjoining owner, either voluntarily or under statutory compulsion,[18] a fence erected on the line between the lands of adjoining owners,[19] or recognized by them as being on the line, although not so in fact,[20] generally belongs to them as tenants in common, the statutes of some states making partition fences joint property, belonging equally to the adjoining proprietors.[21] At any rate, since a partition fence is required to be, and generally is, built equally on both sides of the line, see supra subdivision a of this section, it is presumed to be the common property of both owners, until the contrary is shown.[22]

§ 16. Removal or Destruction of Fences

The liability or culpability of one arising from the removal or destruction of a fence depends on the nature of the fence and the rights of the parties involved. Civil rights and liabilities arising from such removal or destruction are considered infra § 17, and criminal responsibility arising therefrom is considered infra § 18.

a. In General

One removing a fence built on his land by another without authority is not liable therefor. An action in damages lies, however, against one removing or destroying a fence on the land of another.

An owner of land is not liable for removing a fence built thereon without his permission[23] nor is a drainage district liable for removal of a boundary fence built over a drainage ditch in violation of a statute prohibiting the building of a fence over such a ditch.[24] On the other hand, a person who commits a trespass by removing or destroying a fence on another's land becomes liable to an action for damages.[25]

The fact that a fence was not of the kind or dimensions prescribed by statute will not defeat an action for its willful destruction,[26] although it may defeat an action for partial cutting and removal, under a bona fide claim of right to repair,[27] and the fact that the entry and temporary removal of the fence was legal and necessary in constructing a road is no defense to an action for trespass, where the removal or rebuilding was negligent and resulted in damage.[28]

Trover lies against a person who removes a quantity of fence from the land of its owner, although such person was acting at the time under the direction of town officers and mistakenly supposed the fence to be on the land of the town.[29]

Statutory penalty. Persons who throw down or leave open fences are sometimes, by statute, made liable to a penalty recoverable in a civil action.[30] Such statutes, being penal, must be strictly construed,[31] and the object of such statutes being to preserve the integrity of the owner's inclosure, the penalty may be recovered only for leaving open or throwing down part of a complete inclosure.[32]

b. As between Adjacent Owners

(1) In general
(2) Removal on notice

(1) In General

The owner of land may ordinarily remove a fence built entirely on his own land. It is otherwise, generally, as to a partition fence considered the joint property of the adjoining owners, except in the case of consent, or the giving of a prescribed notice.

If a fence separating the lands of adjoining owners is entirely on the land of one and is not a partition fence by virtue of agreement, prescription, or statute, he has a right to remove it.[33]

On the other hand, a partition fence considered the joint property of the adjoining landowners, as discussed supra § 15 b, cannot be arbitrarily removed or destroyed by either of the owners,[34] even if the boundary is in dispute,[35] without the consent of the other,[36] or without complying with the conditions of statutes authorizing removal, as discussed infra subdivision b (2) of this section, or unless it is for the purpose of replacing the fence with another on the same site.[37] If one owner improperly removes or destroys a partition fence, he is liable to the other[38] in an appropriate action, as discussed infra subdivision c of this section. Either, however, may repair such fence and lawfully enter on the land of the other for that purpose,[39] and either may replace it after its removal or destruction.[40] When a partition fence is rebuilt beyond the boundary line, it may properly be removed and replaced on the correct line of the original fence.[41]

is committed by either owner in building a crooked or zigzag fence, one half resting on the land of each adjoining owner, where more than one half of a division fence is built on the land of one owner, without his consent, he may remove the excess,[42] and, if in order to effect such removal it becomes necessary to destroy the whole fence, he may rightfully do so.[43]

Statutory penalties for removal of a partition fence do not of course apply to removal of a fence which is not a division fence.[44] A hedge of growing trees is not removable as a fence under the statutes of some states authorizing one who constructs or owns a division fence or a part thereof to remove it on certain conditions;[45] but a division hedge fence is within the rules and statutes of other jurisdictions relating to removal of division fences.[46]

The owner of inclosed land which he ceases to improve or lays in common has no right to remove any portion of a partition fence standing,[47] although, as discussed supra § 9, he is relieved from the further duty of contributing to its maintenance. Statutes sometimes provide that a landowner who desires to let his land lie open shall not remove his part of a partition fence if the adjoining owner pays him for it.[48]

Right to remove fences placed by mistake. If one of two adjoining landowners, with the knowledge of the other, erects a division or a partition fence which is by mistake placed on the land of the latter, and the former on discovering his mistake removes the fence, the latter cannot recover its value,[49] nor is the former liable to an action of trespass for such removal.[50]

A statute giving the right to remove fences placed by mistake on the lands of other persons has been held to apply only to natural persons, and to give no right to remove fences erected by mistake on lands of the state or of the United States.[51]

(2) Removal on Notice

Statutes sometimes make removal of a partition fence by one of the adjoining owners contingent on the giving of notice to the other.

In some jurisdictions there are statutes which authorize the removal of partition fences, where notice of intention to remove has been given by one adjacent owner to the other, at a prescribed time in advance of the removal, and prohibit their removal where the prescribed notice has been given.[52] Similar statutes in other jurisdictions prohibit the removal of a partition fence without consent except during certain months of the year and then only after giving notice for a prescribed time.[53]

Unless a written notice is called for by the statute,[54] a notice by parol is sufficient.[55]

The fact that one adjacent owner has notified the other that he intends to remove will not justify the other in removing his part without notice, it being only where the party making the removal has given the notice that the statute affords any protection to him.[56]

Application of statutes. The statutes are given a broad application and are not limited to a particular kind of partition fence.[57] According to some authorities the prescribed notice must be given, although the fence is partly or entirely on the land of the party desiring its removal, if it is used as a partition fence by consent of the parties;[58] but in other jurisdictions the rule is otherwise, except where the person desiring removal has consented to the connection of his fence with that of an adjoining owner, in which case reasonable notice, rather than notice for the time prescribed by statute, is necessary.[59]

Effect of removal on notice. The effect of removing a partition fence on notice is to remit the parties to their common-law rights and duties.[60]

Disuniting fences. Where, by agreement or long acquiescence, the fences of adjoining owners are united, one owner cannot disunite the fences or remove his own fence, or a portion thereof, without giving reasonable notice of his intention to the other party.[61]

c. Actions

For a wrongful removal or destruction of a fence an action lies.

For the improper removal or destruction of a fence an appropriate action may be brought.[62]

Pleading. In an action to recover a statutory penalty it is necessary and sufficient to allege facts bringing the case within the statute.[63]

Where, in an action of trespass, notice of intention to remove a partition fence is alleged, the pleading should show that the notice was given in due time and to a proper person.[64]

An allegation that the fence was removed and converted by defendant to his own use does not require a complaint otherwise stating a cause of action for damage to realty to be treated purely as an action in conversion.[65]

Issues, proof, and variance. The essential elements of the action which are in issue and only matters that are such elements must be proved to justify a recovery in an action based on the removal or destruction of a fence. Thus, in an action for damage to a fence, based on negligence, the evidence must establish such negligence.[66]

Under a statute imposing a penalty against one who shall voluntarily throw down or open any fence or gate and leave it open, it is not sufficient to prove merely that defendant threw down a fence, but evidence must be introduced to show that he left it down.[67] It is not necessary to prove that the fence injured or removed inclosed a cultivated field,[68] nor is it necessary to prove notice of removal of a fence built entirely on the land of one owner where the provision for notice relates exclusively to partition fences.[69]

In an action growing out of the removal of a fence, when the ownership of the land on which the fence was situated is not in issue, evidence offered to show title to the land is properly rejectd,[70] and, where such ownership is in issue, evidence of ownership of other tracts of land in the vicinity, by one of the adjoining owners, is incompetent.[71]

Evidence. Direct and affirmative evidence is not necessary to establish the removal of a partition fence; it may be shown by any facts and circumstances sufficient to convince the jury.[72] However, where the evidence is of such nature as to compel the jury to make an inference on an inference in order to find that the loss or damage suffered was caused solely by the removal or destruction of the fence, it is insufficient to justify submission of the case to the jury.[73]

In a civil action for a penalty the jury need not be convinced beyond a reasonable doubt, but only by a preponderance of evidence.[74]

In an action for damages for the removal of a fence without notice, judgment for half the value of the fence is not supported by evidence of statements of defendant that he owned only one half of it, when the otherwise uncontradicted evidence shows that it was built wholly by defendant and that plaintiff's grantor was merely permitted to connect with it.[75]

A witness may testify that a fence for the removal of which an action is brought was a partition fence, although the evidence does not show that it was a statutory partition fence, if he knows the fact that it was erected by agreement between the parties who owned the land, and the statement is not objectionable as a conclusion of law.[76]

Trial. Questions of fact should in actions tried to a jury be submitted to the jury for determination[77] after instructions by the court stating the applicable law.[78] Requested instructions which are not applicable to the evidence or incorrectly state the law thereunder are properly refused,[79] or given after modification to make them correctly state the applicable law.[80]

Where the evidence is sufficient to sustain the verdict of the jury, the verdict should not be set aside.[81]

d. Damages

The measure of damage for the removal or destruction of a fence is its value at the time determined by the cost of replacement less depreciation for age and use.

One who removes or destroys the fence of another is liable to respond in damages for any loss which is the natural or proximate consequence of his act;[82] and, where an adjacent owner removes a partition fence without notice to,[83] or the consent of,[84] the other adjacent owner, when such notice or consent is required by statute, the measure of damages is the same.

The measure of damage for the removal or destruction of a fence is its value as it stood on the realty at the time of its destruction,[85] determined by the cost of building a similar fence,[86] less depreciation from age and use.[87]

Value of land as element. It has been held that, since the fence is a part of the realty, the difference in the value of the land caused by its destruction should be considered in measuring the damages.[88] Where, however, the injury to the realty is temporary only and readily repairable, as where fencing is partially impaired, the measure of damages is the cost of material and labor reasonably necessary to restore the damaged property approximately to its condition when injured.[89]

Nominal damages. Where one who has given the proper notice commences the removal of a partition fence one day prior to the time authorized by statute, he is liable for nominal damages only, unless it is shown that actual loss has been sustained.[90]

Punitive damages. Punitive damages may be awarded against one landowner for wrongfully and forcibly removing a partition fence against the protest of the adjacent owner.[91] Where, however, one's good faith in believing his land invaded by a fence is not impugned, he should not suffer punitive damages for tearing it down.[92]

§ 18. —— Criminal Responsibility

a. In general
b. Affidavit, indictment, or information
c. Evidence
d. Trial

a. In General

Criminal responsibility is often imposed by the statutes for the injury to, or removal or destruction of, a fence.

The statutes often impose criminal responsibility for the injury to, or removal or destruction of, a fence, and whether or not a prosecution can be sustained depends on the terms of the particular statute under which it is brought.[93]

As a general rule to be criminally liable for removing or destroying a fence one must have acted unlawfully and willfully and committed some trespass,[94] malice sometimes being an essential element of the offense.[95] If the purpose is legitimate and no harm is done, the offense is not committed.[96] However, if the statute prohibits voluntarily throwing down a fence, malice or even willfulness is not essential,[97] and in some jurisdictions a mere general intent to do the act prohibited is sufficient, although "wilfully" is used in the statute.[98] If the prohibition is against "unlawfully, maliciously or negligently" destroying a fence, proof that it was "unlawfully" destroyed will authorize a conviction.[99]

Under most,[1] but not all,[2] of the criminal statutes relating to fences, there can be no conviction of a person who, under a bona fide claim of right, removes a fence or performs some other prohibited act relative thereto. However, a mere claim of ownership is not conclusive evidence of good faith[3] and, where one's belief in his right is due to negligence in not ascertaining the fact of ownership of the land on which a fence is located, he is held guilty.[4]

Preventing removal. One cannot be convicted for preventing the removal and relocation of a fence, where the right of removal is doubtful and the line uncertain.[5]

Nature of fence and lands inclosed thereby. Under some statutes, in order to establish criminal liability, it must be shown that the fence constituted an inclosure;[6] but, under a statute merely against maliciously or negligently throwing down a fence, it is not necessary that the fence form a part of an inclosure.[7]

The statutes in some states protect all fences inclosing lands, whether crops are grown thereon or not,[8] while in other states the statutes apply only to fences inclosing cultivated fields or cleared ground under cultivation.[9]

In criminal prosecutions for injuries to, or acts done in connection with, fences, it is immaterial whether or not the fence is a lawful one, that is, of such dimensions as would entitle the owner to bring a civil action for a trespass by the cattle of another.[10] However, one cannot be convicted of tearing down a fence when his act is the pulling up of the posts on which no wire is strung, these not constituting a fence.[11]

Ownership or possession. Generally a person is not criminally liable for removing, destroying, or doing other acts to fences which are on his own land,[12] even if built by another,[13] or to fences on lands of which he is in actual possession,[14] or to a partition fence or a fence of which he is joint owner,[15] or to fences of which he is the owner,[16] or of which he is in actual possession.[17] It is not so much the title to land that controls in cases of this character as it is the quiet and peaceable possession of the property on which the fence is situate.[18]

The inquiry as to the possession of the fence should ordinarily be limited to the actual peaceable possession, and not extended to the right of possession.[19] Where the actual possession is in the prosecutor, defendant cannot exculpate himself by showing title to the land on which the fence was situated.[20]

Where the ownership of the fence is determined by agreement, it is immaterial on whose land it is located.[21]

Under a statute prohibiting anyone from injuring a fence belonging to and inclosing land not his own, the fence must both belong to and inclose land not belonging to the party charged with the offense.[22]

Defenses. Where a trespass is a necessary element of such offenses, any fact may be shown in defense, in general, which might be shown by defendant in an action of trespass.[23] Thus consent of one of the cotenants in possession of the adjoining tract is a sufficient defense in a prosecution for removal of a partition fence.[24]

What constitutes cultivated field

(1) Land cleared, fenced, and cultivated, or kept for cultivation, although nothing is growing within inclosure, is "cultivated field" within statute making it misdemeanor to injure fence.—State v. Cornett, 155 S.E. 451, 199 N.C. 634—25 C.J. p 1037 note 62 [a] (1).

Gratuitous licensor

A gratuitous licensor, who permits another to repair a fence on land rented by the licensor, is not guilty of a willful or malicous trespass for tearing the fence down, where before doing so he notifies the licensee to remove it, and he declines.—Card v. State, 86 So. 460, 123 Miss. 702.

Party fence

(1) Making of slight repairs on fence by adjoining landowner and giving of notice not to interfere would not constitute such fence a "party fence," so as to render the owner liable for its removal.—Evans v. State, 132 So. 455, 159 Miss. 870.

(2) Line fence does not become "party fence" unless provisions of statute are complied with so that each party owns interest in adjoining land and fence.—Evans v. State, supra.

(3) That adjoining landowners may have owned land by adverse possession up to fence would not of itself constitute such fence a "party fence."—Evans v. State, supra.

24. Tex.—Bailey v. State, 87 S.W.

It is no defense that defendant removed the fence in order to induce a civil suit to try title,[25] or that the fence was not on a line fixed by agreement or arbitration,[26] or that defendant was acting as agent of another and by his direction.[27] If, however, defendant ordered his servants to pull down one party's fence, and by mistake they pulled down another's, defendant cannot be convicted.[28]

Where a mere general intent to commit the prohibited act is sufficient, good faith based on a belief that the fence was on defendant's land is no defense.[29]

Officials in charge of public roads or employees lawfully working thereon are not criminally liable for removing a fence which constitutes an obstruction of the highway.[30] On the other hand the removal of a fence obstructing a road which is not a public highway is not justified.[31]

b. Affidavit, Indictment, or Information

The indictment or information must charge all the elements of the offense, but a charge in the language of the statute is generally sufficient.

The indictment or information in a prosecution for removing, destroying, or injuring a fence must charge all the elements of the offense[32] and connect defendant therewith.[33] In accordance with general rules, however, an indictment or information is generally sufficient which charges the offense in the language of the statute.[34]

Affidavit or complaint. Although the same particularity is not necessary in complaints or affidavits before inferior tribunals as would be required in an indictment,[35] yet the affidavit or complaint must state the essential elements of the offense charged.[36]

Unnecessary allegations. It is not generally necessary to allege the value of the fence,[37] or the value or amount of material destroyed,[38] or that damage was done by the removal;[39] neither is it necessary to allege express malice if not mentioned in the statute,[40] or to conclude "contrary to the form of the statute."[41] A particular description of the land on which the offense was committed is unnecessary,[42] and, having alleged that the fence was pulled down, it is not necessary further to charge that it was left down and open.[43]

Joinder of civil and criminal action. A criminal prosecution and a civil action to recover a penalty cannot be joined where one statute imposes treble damages for the benefit of the injured party for throwing down a fence and another makes such act a misdemeanor.[44]

Variance. Under a statute against injuring or pulling down the fence of another without his consent, an allegation of ownership of the fence by one party is sufficient, although the evidence shows a joint ownership.[45] However, under an indictment charging removal of a fence around a cultivated field, a conviction cannot be had on proof that the fence involved surrounded a pasture field, even though the statute on which the indictment is based prohibits removal of a fence surrounding a pasture as well as a cultivated field.[46]

A discrepancy of one month between the date of the offense charged in the information and that stated in the affidavit on which the information was founded is not cause for quashing the information after verdict.[47]

c. Evidence

The essential elements of the offense charged in a prosecution for removing, destroying, or injuring a fence must be proved beyond a reasonable doubt.

In some jurisdictions the destruction or injury of a fence is presumed to have been done willfully and maliciously,[48] and proof that defendant destroyed or injured the fence in the manner alleged throws on him the burden of proving that he honestly believed he had a right to do so.[49]

Admissibility. General rules governing the admissibility of evidence in criminal cases govern the admissibility of evidence in prosecutions for removing, destroying, or injuring a fence.[50]

50. Consent or want thereof

(1) The custom of various parties to pass over the prosecutor's fence with his knowledge and without his objection is admissible.—Caudle v. State, Tex.Cr., 74 S.W. 545.

(2) It seems that declarations of the parties or their agents are admissible to show want of consent to the breaking or removal of a fence.—Pate v. State, 113 S.W. 757, 54 Tex. Cr. 491.

(3) In a prosecution for breaking down a fence, when the owner cannot be had before the court, it is competent to prove his want of consent by circumstances.—Caudle v. State, supra—25 C.J. p 1040 note 26.

(4) Notices published in a newspaper purporting to be signed by the owners of the land prohibiting trespassing thereon are inadmissible to show want of consent of one of the owners in the absence of evidence that he published them or authorized their publication.—Caudle v. State, supra.

(5) Likewise the posting of notices about an inclosure by the foreman or servant of the owners is inadmissible to show want of consent of the owners.—Caudle v. State, supra. 25 C.J. p 1040 note 28.

Malice

In a prosecution for malicious injury to a fence belonging to a church, evidence of expressions by defendant showing enmity toward the officers and members while engaged in the business of the church is admissible as far as showing malice toward the society.—People v. Ferguson, 78 N.W. 334, 119 Mich. 373.

Motive

In a prosecution for destroying a fence, it is competent to prove declarations going to show motive, where accused made such declarations, or where they were made in his presence and hearing and received either his active or tacit consent.—Smith v. State, Tex.Cr., 70 S. W. 84.

Ownership or possession

(1) Evidence tending to show possession, and the character thereof, is admissible.—Hughitt v. State, 179 S.W. 703, 77 Tex.Cr. 573.

(2) At least under some statutes, evidence along this line should be confined to possession and not extended to title or ownership separate and apart from possession.—Bray v. State, 219 S.W. 1102, 87 Tex.Cr. 146.

(3) Defendant may introduce a deed to the property on which the fence was located as tending to show rightful possession.—McCuen v. State, Tex.Cr., 68 S.W. 180—25 C.J. p 1039 note 12.

(4) Defendant may introduce a deed to show that the prosecutor was not in quiet and peaceful possession.—Pate v. State, Tex.Cr., 81 S.W. 737.

(5) Accused cannot introduce conveyances showing ownership in a third party.—Wallace v. State, 26 So. 932, 124 Ala. 87.

(6) Accused cannot introduce evidence of his rights in a tract of land not in controversy.
Ark.—Fleming v. State, 279 S.W. 778, 170 Ark. 344.
Kan.—State v. Adams, 138 P. 580, 91 Kan. 642.

(7) In prosecution for the willful and malicious cutting of a fence inclosing land not belonging to defendants, a quitclaim deed was admissible to prove the allegation of the indictment that the land did not belong to defendants.—Studstill v. State, 92 So. 151, 83 Fla. 623.

(8) Although a fence is realty, its ownership, as far as is necessary to be proved, may be proved by parol.—Fitzsimon v. State, 128 S.W. 903, 59 Tex.Cr. 540—Joy v. State, 51 S.W. 933, 41 Tex.Cr. 46—25 C.J. p 1039 note 17.

(9) On the question of ownership defendant cannot put in evidence a survey not made in conformity to statutory provisions and not shown to have been by the consent of the adjacent owner.—Boett v. State, 31 So. 551, 132 Ala. 23.

(10) Evidence of a survey made under agreement is admissible.—State v. Buck, 51 A. 1087, 74 Vt. 29.

(11) Evidence that the party claiming the land on which the fence was built had built it, and that parties holding under him had cultivated it without interference from accused, is admissible to show possession and ownership of the fence.—Kalklosch v. State, 80 S.W. 85, 46 Tex.Cr. 94.

(12) In order to prove his possession defendant may introduce the pleadings in a pending action between the same parties to try title, including the prosecutor's petition alleging possession of the property in defendant.—McCuen v. State, 68 S.W. 180, 43 Tex.Cr. 612.

Proper location of division fence

(1) It may be shown in a prosecution for moving a division fence that in a prior civil suit between defendant and the prosecuting witness a judgment was rendered establishing the boundary where the fence was located.—Dorrell v. State, 83 Ind. 357.

(2) Defendant may introduce deed to show the proper location of a division fence.—Fitzsimon v. State, 128 S.W. 903, 59 Tex.Cr. 540.

Removal under claim of right

In order to show removal under moving, destroying, or injuring a fence, the evidence must be sufficient to establish all the elements of the offense charged[51] beyond a reasonable doubt.[52]

Circumstantial evidence may be sufficient to connect defendant with the offence charged,[53] and, where malice is an essential ingredient of the crime charged, it need not be proved expressly, but may be inferred from the surrounding circumstances,[54] if sufficient to justify such an inference.[55]

Some statutes require the conviction to be based on the testimony of a certain number of witnesses.[56]

d. Trial

In a prosecution for removing, destroying, or injuring a fence, questions of fact are ordinarily for the jury, while questions of law are for the court. The instructions should correctly state the law applicable to the facts.

In accordance with general rules ordinarily questions of fact in a prosecution for removing, destroying, or injuring a fence are for determination by the jury, while questions of law are for the court,[57] and neither may properly invade the province of the other.[58]

Instructions. The instructions to the jury should contain correct statements of the law applicable to the evidence.[59]

Requested instructions which are misleading[60] or are not called for by the evidence[61] may and should be refused.

Where the party accused of destroying the fence introduces no evidence of his title, an instruction that the title to the land will not be affected by the verdict, and that titles to land cannot be determined, is not prejudicial.[62]

An instruction that it is a question for the jury

a claim of right, evidence of a pending injunction against maintenance of the fence is admissible.—State v. Jablowsky, 152 S.W. 390, 169 Mo. App. 238.

Res gestæ

(1) Acts and circumstances in relation to the breaking or pulling down of the fence are admissible as part of the transaction.—Caudle v. State, Tex.Cr., 74 S.W. 545.

(2) This rule does not render admissible acts done so long after the transaction as not to be a part of the res gestæ.—Caudle v. State, supra.

Fence inclosing land in sections

Under a charge of cutting a fence inclosing land in two designated sections separated by a public road evidence of cutting the fence on either or both of the sections is admissible.—State v. Morse, 66 Mo.App. 303.

51. Tex.—Morgan v. State, 271 S.W. 608, 99 Tex.Cr. 661—McCullers v. State, 216 S.W. 182, 86 Tex.Cr. 247.
25 C.J. p 1040 note 33.

Evidence of substantial nature is sufficient.—Fleming v. State, 279 S. W. 778, 170 Ark. 344.

Malicious mischief

(1) Charge of malicious mischief in breaking, injuring, and pulling down a fence is not proved by evidence of assistance in carrying away a gate and hiding it after it had been removed by another.—Meador v. State, 162 S.W. 1155, 72 Tex.Cr. 527.

(2) But a charge of malicious mischief in pulling down and destroying a fence is sufficiently proved by showing the pulling out of a post or posts of a fence in process of erection.—Olson v. People, 138 P. 21, 56 Colo. 199.

Malice

(1) Evidence sufficient.—Commonwealth v. Lick, 22 A.2d 616, 146 Pa. Super. 435.

(2) Evidence insufficient.—Ratabaugh v. State, 209 P. 230, 21 Okl.Cr. 465.

Proof of ownership

(1) Although a deed to the prosecutor misdescribed the land, ownership may be sufficiently shown by occupancy for the prescriptive period. —People v. Ferguson, 78 N.W. 334, 119 Mich. 373.

(2) Ownership in another than defendant is not sustained by testimony of the prosecuting witness that the fence was his and on his land, but that he knew nothing about the line between him and defendant, when defendant and others testified that the fence was on defendant's land and that they knew the line.—Oliver v. State, Tex.Cr., 37 S.W. 427.

(3) Evidence sufficient to show ownership by prosecutor.—Lunsford v. State, 94 S.E. 80, 21 Ga.App. 78.

Throwing and leaving fence down

A prosecution for throwing down and leaving open a fence is not supported by evidence of throwing down and going across the adjacent premises; it must affirmatively appear that the fence was left down.—State v. Howell, 34 Mo.App. 86.

52. N.C.—State v. Cornett, 155 S.E. 451, 199 N.C. 634.

Guesswork and speculation

Dedication of inclosed land as street is for jury.—State v. Godwin, supra.

Sufficiency of watercourse as fence

The sufficiency of a watercourse to serve as a fence was held to be a question of law for the court, the jury deciding the facts.—State v. Lamb, 30 N.C. 229.

Conflict in the evidence is for the jury to resolve.—State v. Jacobson, 47 P.2d 228, 55 Idaho 711.

58. Peremptory charge improper

The credibility of witnesses and the ultimate fact of guilt being questions for the jury, a peremptory charge by the court to find defendant guilty is erroneous.—State v. Godwin, 59 S.E. 132, 145 N.C. 461, 122 Am.S.R. 467.

to determine the weight and credit "if any" to be given to defendant's statement is not objectionable as minimizing the importance of the statement.[63]

Insufficiency of proof. Where proof of an essential element is lacking, a verdict for defendant should be directed[64] or a verdict of guilty set aside.[65]

§ 19. Fencing Lands of Another

For unlawfully fencing the lands of another one may be held civilly or criminally liable.

As discussed in the C.J.S. title Property § 13, also 50 C.J. p 780 note 11, private ownership of realty carries with it the exclusive right to its use and occupancy. The willful violation of the prerogatives of such ownership by one's erection of a fence on the land of another exposes the trespasser to an action for damages,[66] although the property itself is not in fact injured.[67]

Criminal responsibility. Under some statutes one may be held criminally responsible for unlawfully fencing the lands of another,[68] or for failing to remove or disconnect such a fence on receipt of a specified notice.[69]

An action for unlawfully making or permitting a fence to remain about the lands of another must be prosecuted in the name of the state, although half the fine goes to the informer.[70]

§ 20. Injuries Caused by Failure to Erect or Maintain Fences

One under a duty to build or maintain a fence is generally liable for injuries resulting from his neglect properly to build or maintain a fence.

One whose duty it is to build or maintain a fence is as a general rule liable for all injuries which may be fairly said to be the legal and natural consequence of his neglect to do so,[71] including injuries to live stock[72] or crops,[73] common-law remedies being available to the injured party where no remedy is specified by the statute imposing the duty to erect or maintain the fence.[74] To recover plaintiff must prove that defendant was under a duty to maintain a part of the division fence, that he neglected so to do, and that the injury sustained was proximately caused by such neglect,[75] there being no liability where there is no duty to fence,[76] or where there is no neglect,[77] or where the neglect is not the proximate cause of the injury.[78]

Elements of damage

(1) Only element of damage where land is not injured is that arising from the trespass and violation of the owner's rights.—Hoyt v. Smith, supra.

(2) Attorney's fees, expenses incurred before filing suit, and expenses incurred as incident to attending court were not recoverable as damage.—Hoyt v. Smith, supra.

(3) Seventy-five dollars was held proper for mere act of trespass, causing no injury to land, whereby considerable part of plaintiff's woodland was enclosed with fence for three months.—Hoyt v. Smith, supra.

68. Effect of continued claim to lands

A conviction for unlawfully, willfully, and knowingly fencing the land of another will not be sustained, where it appears that defendant has all along made claim to that portion of the land on which the fence was erected, and it also appears that his vendors made a similar claim.—Clark v. State, 5 S.W. 163, 23 Tex.App. 618.

69. Indictment or information

(1) An information for failing to disconnect and remove a fence as prescribed by statute must allege that the fence was not removed within the time allowed after the requisite notice was given.—Elkins v. State, 51 S.W. 372, 40 Tex.Cr. 589.

Sufficiency of proof of agreement

In action against adjoining owner for damage to cattle caused by defendant's breach of agreement to keep his portion of division fence in repair, involving a question as to existence of agreement, defendant's action in repairing a part of his portion of fence, on plaintiff's notice to him that plaintiff's cattle were going through fence, and in repairing the other part of such portion after plaintiff's cattle had been injured, was held to warrant jury finding that repairs were made pursuant to such an agreement.—Osgood v. Names, supra.

Mass.—Fales v. Cole, 26 N.E. 872, 153 Mass. 322.

An agreement between adjoining owners to dispense with a partition fence exempts each from liability to the other for injuries resulting from failure to fence,[79] and, where adjoining owners enter into an agreement that each will maintain half of a partition fence, neither can maintain trespass against the other for injuries resulting from an insufficient fence, the proper remedy being for breach of contract.[80]

Some courts hold that, where the obligation to maintain a partition fence does not arise by virtue of agreement or prescription, but only by virtue of statute, and the statute does not impose liability for injury to animals, a person who has been diligent in keeping up his part of the fence as required by statute cannot recover damages, against the adjoining owner who is delinquent in his duty, by reason of the former's cattle going through the defective fence on the land of the adjoining owner and there suffering injury.[81]

Where the injury is caused by defect in a partition fence, it must be shown that the injury resulted from a defect in that portion of the fence which it is the duty of defendant to maintain;[82] but the fact that the portion of the fence which it is the duty of the adjoining landowner to maintain is defective also does not relieve from liability.[83]

As discussed in Animals § 186 b, one who fails to maintain his portion of a partition fence properly is without redress for injuries occasioned by his neighbor's stock breaking through such portion, as the loss is occasioned by his own negligence. So, in case of a party line fence removed by one of the adjoining owners after it had fallen into disuse, the other adjoining owner cannot recover for personal injuries suffered because of the absence of the fence where he was aware of the danger and could have restored the fence himself.[84]

Double damages. Some statutes render a person liable in double damages for killing or injuring a domestic animal which has entered his field for want of a lawful fence. In an action under the statute it is not essential to recovery that plaintiff prove the precise spot at which his animal entered defendant's field. He may undertake to show that the entire fence around the field was an unlawful fence and in bad condition, and, for this purpose, may introduce evidence of its condition at places other than the one at which the animal entered.[85]

§ 21. Injuries Caused by Fences

As discussed infra §§ 22, 23, liability for injuries resulting from the erection and maintenance of a fence is determined by general rules of negligence and the applicable statutes.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 22. —— To Persons

Liability for personal injuries caused by a fence generally depends on ordinary rules of negligence. There is no liability, as a general rule, to a trespasser.

The question whether a person is liable for personal injuries arising from the erection of a fence depends on the ordinary principles or rules as to what constitutes negligence.[86] The owner of the land on which a fence is maintained, or other person who is responsible for its maintenance, is not an insurer against injury,[87] or bound to provide against extraordinary conditions.[88] He is not liable for a personal injury caused by its fall if he uses the care of a prudent man in maintaining it;[89] but, where he negligently fails to maintain his fence in a condition reasonably safe, or if he keeps it in an unreasonably dangerous condition, he is responsible for the natural and probable consequences of his neglect.[90]

If, as between two adjoining owners, the duty of maintaining a partition fence rests exclusively on one of them, the other owner is not liable to a third person for a personal injury caused by its fall.[91] However, the owner himself being responsible for maintenance of a defective or dilapidated fence, he cannot relieve himself of that obligation by an agreement with another in the nature of a lease, the lessee agreeing to repair and assuming liability for injuries.[92]

Fence along or across road. The owner of land on which a fence is built, or another who is responsible for the maintenance thereof, must, as far as the exercise of ordinary care will enable him to do so, keep it in such condition that it will not fall and injure persons passing along the highway.[93]

Where a landowner builds a barbed wire or other dangerous fence across a traveled road, without maintaining proper warning, and a traveler is thereby injured, a charge permitting the jury to find such owner negligent is within the issues, and a finding of negligence is justified.[94] Where, however, the road, although traveled and used by the public for some time, is entirely on defendant's land and is not a public highway, his actionable negligence, if any, consists only in not giving such notice of the obstruction across the way as would be reasonable under the circumstances.[95]

Injury to trespassers. A landowner owes no duty to persons trespassing on his lands, in the construction of fencing not along public highways, and there can be no negligence in the construction of such fencing.[96] The rule is applicable even where the fence is of barbed wire[97] and the intrusion is accidental.[98]

Effect of statute on common-law action. In a common law negligence action for injuries caused by a barbed wire fence statutes forbidding use of barbed wire in fences erected in specified areas are not admissible in evidence.[99]

Proximate, concurring, and intervening causes. The fact that there was an intervening contributory cause does not preclude recovery where the circumstances are such that the owner of the fence should have anticipated the occurrence.[1]

Contributory negligence. Since ordinarily prudent persons lean on fences, rails, and banisters without thought of injury, reasonable care requires maintenance thereof with reference to such usual and ordinary user.[2]

A person is not guilty of contributory negligence for such user when the fence appears to be reasonably safe for the purpose.[3] However, the party so injured may be declared negligent as a matter of law, when the fence was known to him to be defective and unsafe.[4]

When the party injured has no knowledge of the defective fence, the question of contributory negligence should be left to the jury.[5] The jury should also determine the question of negligence in the erection of an unprotected barbed wire fence along a schoolhouse lot where children were accustomed to play, and of contributory negligence of a child in running into the fence while looking backward.[6]

Where the uncontradicted evidence shows that the fall of a fence was caused by a large number of trespassers climbing on it, and that it did not give way under the pressure for several minutes, although it was many years old and somewhat rotten, it is the duty of the court to withdraw the case from the jury and direct a verdict for defendant, the

High wind as concurring cause
Where a fence is insecurely built, and it blows down and injures a person passing, the fence is none the less the proximate cause of the injury because the high wind was a concurring cause.—Sutphen v. Hedden, 51 A. 721, 67 N.J.Law 324—25 C.J. p 1041 note 64.

Fence on precipice
A defective fence maintained on the brink of a quarry or precipice, which gives way to a person rightfully leaning over it, is the proximate cause of injury, the maintenance of the quarry itself being remote in the chain of causation.—Herdt v. Koenig, 119 S.W. 56, 137 Mo. App. 589.

proximate cause being the trespass, and not the condition of the fence.[7]

§ 23. —— To Animals

One negligently building or maintaining a fence so as to cause injury to live stock rightfully coming in contact therewith is, in the absence of contributory negligence, liable therefor in damages.

One who builds or maintains a fence must see that it is in a reasonably safe condition and unlikely to injure live stock rightfully coming in contact with it, and for all injuries caused by a failure in this respect he is liable to respond in damages.[8]

Acts of agents. A landowner is liable for injuries to stock resulting from the negligent construction of his fence by his agent or servant.[9] The owner's agent, however, is not responsible for the negligence or want of care of a subagent employed by him, where he has been reasonably careful in the selection of a subagent.[10]

By barbed wire fences. The act of a landowner in erecting a barbed wire fence does not in itself render him liable to one whose live stock sustains injuries therefrom.[11] However, one negligently constructing or maintaining such a fence and thereby causing injury to stock lawfully at large or on the adjacent lands is liable therefor,[12] and, if there is gross negligence, or entire want of care in its construction, punitory damages are recoverable.[13]

When the defective barbed wire fence causing the injury is entirely on defendant's land, and not near a highway, ordinarily defendant is not liable.[14] On the other hand, when a barbed wire fence is so negligently constructed as to constitute a trap for passing live stock, liability exists for injuries sustained by them, even though it is constructed entirely on defendant's land and the stock are trespassing when injured.[15]

Where a landowner, having allowed the public to travel a well defined road across his land for a considerable time, although not for the prescriptive period, stretches a barbed wire across the road without proper warning, he is liable for injuries caused thereby to horses or other animals driven over the road after dark.[16]

Contributory negligence. One whose negligence contributed to the injury of his live stock cannot recover therefor.[17] Thus an owner who permits his live stock to stray on the common, and trespass on others' lands, cannot recover for injuries to such stock by fences placed on others' lands, and not located unreasonably close to a highway.[18] It is not contributory negligence, however, for one to turn his stock loose in his own field, or in a public highway, with knowledge that a fence constructed by another partly around such field or along such highway is improperly and negligently constructed, as he cannot be deprived of the use of his own premises or the public highway by another's violation of duty;[19] nor is one guilty of contributory negligence in failing to maintain his portion of a partition fence over which live stock escapes, where the injury is immediately caused by defendant in driving the animal against a barbed wire fence, while attempting to catch and return it.[20]

Actions. A petition or complaint is sufficient

I. DEFINITION AND NATURE

§ 1. In General

A ferry may be defined as a right or liberty to have a vessel upon a stream or other body of water for the transportation of persons and their teams and vehicles with their contents across it for a reasonable toll. The term also is used to refer to the place where the right is exercised or to the landing places.

In a strict technical sense a ferry is a continuation of a highway from one side of the water over which it passes to the other and is for the transportation of passengers or travelers with their teams or vehicles and such other property as they may carry or have with them.[1] More broadly it may be defined as a liberty to have a boat on a stream, river, arm of the sea, lake, or other body of water for the transportation of men, horses, and vehicles and their contents for a reasonable toll.[2] As is shown infra § 2, ferries may be either public or private, and as is shown infra § 3 b the existence of a franchise is essential to the lawful establishment of a public ferry, the general definitions of a ferry sometimes given incorporating the idea of public right or franchise.[3] A more restricted definition of a ferry is that it is a necessary service by a specially constructed boat to carry passengers and property across rivers or bodies of water from a place on one shore to a point conveniently opposite on the other shore and in continuation of a highway, making connections with a thoroughfare at each terminus.[4] The term is also used to

Necessity to afford crossing

"Ferry" is service of necessity for common good to reach point across stream, lagoon, lake, or bay.—U. S. v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., supra.

designate the place where the right is exercised,[5] and sometimes as limited to the landing place.[6] There is nothing in the nature of a ferry which requires that it should be operated from but one place on one shore to a single point on the opposite shore;[7] nor is there any particular limit to the distance over which it may be operated, provided only the intervening waters are not wide and can be traversed at regular and brief intervals by boats adapted to a ferry business.[8] In determining whether a service is a ferry service, the character of the service rendered, the type of the vessels employed, the length of the trip, the places or localities served, and the manner in which the trips of the vessels are made must all be taken into consideration.[9] A ferry may consist of the right to transport from one shore only, or from one shore to the middle of the stream.[10] It is immaterial by what means the ferryboat is propelled.[11]

A ferry may be intra-state, interstate, or international,[12] and the difference between a "ferry" and an "international ferry" is of degree and not of kind, since a ferry is the same whether connecting villages, states, or nations.[13]

Ferry as highway. Ferries are frequently referred to or regarded as public highways, being continuations of the highways with which they connect,[14] and serving the purpose of a bridge where a bridge is impracticable;[15] but the terms "ferry" and "bridge" are not ordinarily capable of use as synonymous terms,[16] and it has been denied that ferries are highways in a strict sense.[17] The limits of the ferry proper are the high-water mark at either terminus,[18] and, strictly speaking, a highway connects with a ferry only at the water's edge.[19]

A ferry franchise, emanating from the state or its mandatories, may be defined as a grant to a named person empowering him to continue an interrupted land highway over the interrupting waters.[20]

The term "ferriage" has been defined as the price or fare fixed by law for transportation of the traveling public, with such goods and chattels as they may have with them, across a river, bay, or lake.[21]

Railroad ferry is part of a railroad route, serving as a substitute for a railroad bridge, and is a means of connecting different railroad tracks or different railroads, and it differs widely, except in name, from a general or unlimited ferry.[22]

"Facilities," as applied to a ferry, means everything incident to the general, prompt, and safe carriage of passengers, boats in good repair, appliances answering the purpose, and readiness and willingness to perform the services incident to the grant.[23]

§ 2. Private and Public Ferries Distinguished

A public ferry is one open to the general public, whereas a private ferry is one operated primarily for the benefit of the proprietor.

While in a general sense all ferries are regarded as publici juris,[24] a distinction is made between private ferries, which riparian owners may under certain restrictions establish for their own convenience, and public ferries which are franchises that cannot be exercised without the consent of the state and must be based on grant, license, or prescription.[25] It has been said that a public ferry is one to which all the public have the right to resort, the ferryman being bound to take all who apply on payment of the regular fare, whereas a private ferry is one operated mainly for the use of the owner and which is not open to the public at its demand, even though he may occasionally take pay for ferriage.[26] A public ferry is a part of a highway and necessarily subserves public interest and convenience;[27] but it is more than a mere continuation of the highway and includes in the idea of public service the necessary incidents of toll and probable monopoly.[28]

II. ESTABLISHMENT, MAINTENANCE, AND FRANCHISES

§ 3. Right to Establish and Maintain in General

a. Private ferries
b. Public ferries

a. Private Ferries

A riparian owner may establish operation of boats across a body of water for his own private business without legislative or similar authorization, but he may not directly or indirectly do so for the accommodation of any substantial portion of the public.

A riparian owner may, without legislative authority, establish a ferry for his own use, and may occasionally carry others and receive compensation therefor, provided it is not done as a regular business;[29] but he has no right to receive regular compensation either directly or indirectly, or to operate the ferry for the accommodation of any considerable portion of the general public.[30] A riparian proprietor operating a private ferry from his own land has no right to land upon the property of the opposite owner without the latter's permission;[31] nor can he, for a private ferry, use land condemned for a public highway without the consent of the owner of the land so condemned, in states where such owner is given a preferable right to call for a public ferry franchise, when a ferry becomes necessary.[32]

b. Public Ferries

A franchise is prerequisite to lawful establishment of a public ferry, and the absolute right to establish and maintain one is not appurtenant to riparian ownership. Unauthorized establishment of a public ferry may be remedied by quo warranto or an equivalent proceeding.

Without compensation

It has been said that, strictly speaking, operation of a boat across a stream or other body of water for the primary benefit of the proprietor is not a "ferry," either public or private, since the term "ferry" imports receipt of compensation from those carried.—Futch v. Bohannon, 67 S.E. 814, 134 Ga. 313.

32. Tex.—Buford v. Smith, 21 S.W. 168, 2 Tex.Civ.App. 178.

The right to ferry across a river or other body of water is primarily in the interest of the public and not of the ferry owner,[33] and a franchise is prerequisite to the lawful establishment of a public ferry.[34] In other words, the right to establish and operate a public ferry, which was under the English common law a franchise of the crown, is in this country a right of the state, and may be conferred on individuals by county authorities acting as an agency of the state.[35] The right is a franchise which cannot be exercised without the consent of the state, and no person, although he may own the land on both sides of a stream, may establish such a ferry unless authorized to do so by the proper public authority;[36] nor can the grant to the proprietor be altered or enlarged except by a supplemental grant or the consent of the proper public authorities.[37] Unless otherwise provided by statute, the grant of authority to conduct a ferry must be express,[38] except where it may be held to be necessarily incidental to other powers granted.[39] An express power to establish a ferry to effectuate other powers granted does not confer a right to establish a ferry independent of the exercise of such powers.[40] The right to operate a public ferry is not appurtenant to riparian ownership,[41] and will not be inferred, by implication, from a mere grant of land,[42] or of articles of incorporation,[43] or of a municipal charter,[44] or of privileges other than that of maintaining a public ferry, to the exercise of which the ferry right is not a necessary incident.[45]

In some states the legislative authority conferred by general statutes obviates the necessity of an express grant or license in certain specified instances, as, for example, toll ferries maintained by riparian

Preferential privilege without absolute right

The owner of land on both banks of a navigable stream does not have an absolute right to operate a public ferry as appurtenant to his riparian ownership, but at most is accorded a preferential privilege, as against strangers to the title, to be exercised only in event that the public authorities deem it in the public interest, and if the owner does not demand the privilege or right to operate a ferry it may be granted by the public to a stranger.—McCrary v. proprietors at points other than at a public road crossing.[46]

Remedies for unlawful establishment. If a public ferry is established without authority, the state has a remedy by quo warranto or other equivalent proceeding,[47] and any prior grantee, whose rights are infringed, by action, as discussed infra § 16. A defendant charged with unlawfully usurping the franchise for a public ferry must show that he has a valid title, or that he is not using the franchise.[48]

§ 4. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

The courts have upheld the validity of statutes regulating the grant and revocation of ferry franchises.

In some jurisdictions it has been broadly declared that all ferries are governed by general or special statute, and not by common law.[49]

The courts have upheld the validity of statutes regulating the establishment of ferries,[50] and the alteration[51] and revocation[52] of ferry franchises.

The operation and effect of constitutional and statutory provisions are discussed in appropriate sections infra this title, as in §§ 7 and 8 dealing with powers to grant ferry franchises and § 22 dealing with general regulation and control of ferries.

§ 5. Establishment by Public Authorities

The establishment of ferries by the public authorities is discussed in connection with the power to grant the franchise infra § 7 et seq.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 6. Ferry Companies

Incorporation of a ferry company does not relieve the operator of the duty of obtaining a license to maintain and operate the ferry. Ferry companies may ordinarily own boats in excess of those immediately and constantly employed in their ferry business and charter such boats to third persons without exceeding their charter powers.

Statutes providing for the incorporation of ferry companies are designed to furnish a mode by which a corporation may be created for the purpose of maintaining a public ferry, and the incorporation of a ferry company under general laws does not confer on it the right to operate a ferry without obtaining a license on due application to the proper authorities.[53]

Under a charter incorporating a ferry company to establish and maintain a ferry between designated points and to own, hold, and possess such vessels and other personalty not exceeding a specified amount in value as might be necessary and convenient for management of its ferry and affairs, the main purpose for which the ferry company is incorporated is transportation of persons and property between the designated points; but the ferry company does not exceed its corporate powers by owning steamboats within the limitation of value although not required for immediate or constant use in the daily prosecution of its regular business and held merely by way of reserve for emergencies or the like, and, where it owns such a boat, the ferry company may contract with others wishing to use it without exceeding its charter powers.[54]

Under a statute creating a named individual and his associates a ferry corporation, he is invested with the powers conferred even though he takes no associates and acts alone, since if possessed of adequate funds he may serve the public as effectually by himself and agents as though other persons shared in the profits and duties of the ferry company.[55]

The acquisition of ferry franchises by corporations is discussed infra § 10.

b. Imposition of conditions
c. Power to establish ferries on boundary waters

a. In General

In the United States the power to establish ferries and to grant franchises for such purpose inheres in the states, which may delegate it to agencies or political subdivisions, and is not exercised by the federal government as it lies within the undelegated powers reserved to the states. This doctrine applies to navigable as well as to other waters.

In England the power of granting ferry franchises emanates from the crown. In Canada the right is vested in the provinces, except as to ferries between a province and any British or foreign country or between two provinces, which are subjects of Dominion legislation.[56]

In the United States ferries are established by the legislative authority of the states, which is exercised either directly by a special act of the legislature, or through some inferior body to which power has been delegated under the provisions of a general law.[57] In the making of such general laws territorial legislatures have the same power as those of the states.[58] In this connection it has been said that the inherent right to grant a franchise to operate a ferry inheres in the sovereignty within which it is proposed to use such franchise, but that it is competent for such sovereignty to delegate the right to grant the franchise to agencies or political subdivisions.[59]

The power of establishing ferries is never exercised by the federal government, but lies within the scope of those undelegated powers which are reserved to the states respectively.[60]

Establishment by special act. There are constitutional provisions in some states prohibiting the grant of franchises by special acts in enumerated cases, extending in some instances to the chartering or licensing of ferries. Such provisions are prospective and do not operate to destroy existing ferry franchises.[61] A similar prohibition prevailed in the territories.[62]

Ferries over navigable waters. The state has the same right to grant ferry franchises over navigable waters that it has to grant such franchises over nonnavigable waters.[63]

Presumption of authority. A grant of a ferry franchise by the proper granting agency, but by an officer or board having only a de facto existence, will be presumed, in the absence of proof to the contrary, to have been made with authority.[64]

b. Imposition of Conditions

The state may impose conditions on the right to enjoy a ferry franchise, which apply only within its own jurisdiction.

The state in granting a ferry franchise may impose such terms and conditions on the right to enjoy it as may be necessary to its proper regulation.[65] The conditions imposed are operative only within the jurisdiction of the state granting the franchise.[66]

c. Power to Establish Ferries on Boundary Waters

The states, and not the federal government, have authority to establish ferries and to grant ferry franchises for waters forming the boundary between states, or between a state and a foreign nation. The state may confer franchise good only within its own jurisdiction. The power of an inferior body to grant a ferry franchise as to boundary waters depends on the statute granting it.

In the case of counties within the same state, neither has complete jurisdiction of establishment of ferries on its boundary waters.

The states, and not the federal government, have the authority to establish ferries upon waters forming a boundary between the states,[67] or between a state and a foreign country.[68] The franchise of one state can confer no rights as to landing upon or ferrying from the other state,[69] but is valid as far as the jurisdiction of the state which grants the franchise extends, without any concurrent action on the part of the other state.[70] The franchise of either state may be made exclusive as to ferrying from its own shore,[71] but it cannot be made to exclude ferries operating under franchises granted by the state on the opposite shore.[72] The jurisdiction of a state over a ferry is determined by its point of departure, and the fact that the landing place is in another jurisdiction does not take it out of the jurisdiction of the authority which granted the franchise.[73]

Powers of inferior bodies. The power of an inferior body to establish ferries on boundary waters depends on the terms of the statute conferring authority on it. Where the statute is construed to give the inferior body jurisdiction as ample as the legislature possesses, its authority to establish ferries upon boundary waters cannot be impeached;[74] but statutes enumerating the instances in which the inferior body is given authority to establish ferries, and not specifically referring to the establishment of ferries upon boundary waters, have been construed not to give authority to the inferior body to establish ferries upon waters forming a boundary between states.[75]

Where a stream or other body of water forms the boundary between two counties within the same state, the granting of ferry privileges is not wholly within the jurisdiction of either county,[76] and the counties on each side may have concurrent jurisdiction,[77] or each may have exclusive jurisdiction on its own side to the center of the stream.[78] Statutes authorizing county commissioners to construct, maintain, and operate ferries under their own direction over streams forming the boundaries between two counties will not be extended by implication to authorize the county authorities to grant a franchise to others to establish ferries over boundary waters.[79]

§ 8. —— Delegation of Power to Inferior Bodies

a. In general
b. Limitations on power of inferior body

a. In General

Inferior bodies, such as counties and municipalities, may establish ferries and grant ferry franchises under power delegated to them by the state, but in the absence of such a delegation of power they ordinarily lack authority to do so. The power delegated is subject to recall by the state which granted it.

Under general laws prevailing in many jurisdictions, the power to establish ferries and grant ferry franchises lies in sundry inferior bodies exercising a delegated authority in such respect, as in the case of county or session courts,[80] county commission-

Destruction of jurisdiction by implication not favored
The long established jurisdiction of county courts to grant ferry franchises may not be destroyed by implication arising merely from establishment of a state highway system under other authorities which makes no mention of the matter of ferries.—McCrary v. Harrell, 62 S.W. 2d 566, 166 Tenn. 431.

Judicial control
(1) Quarterly county court's reasonable exercise of its jurisdiction to establish, continue, or discontinue ferries may not be judicially controlled.—McCrary v. Harrell, supra.

(2) County court, in exercising statutory jurisdiction to grant ferry franchise, does not act in legislative or executive capacity for county, but in judicial capacity for commonwealth.—Tri-State Ferry Co. v. Birney, 31 S.W.2d 932, 235 Ky. 540, appeal dismissed 51 S.Ct. 349, 283 U.S. 868, 75 L.Ed. 1471.

ers,[81] boards of county supervisors,[82] police juries,[83] and municipalities.[84] The first county court rightfully to assume jurisdiction of the granting of a ferry franchise continues to retain such jurisdiction exclusive of any other county court of a county contiguous to the body of water until in some legal manner it relinquishes its jurisdiction.[85] Where the power to establish ferries is conferred on inferior bodies by general statutes, their power in such respect is in no wise dependent on other and particular statutory provisions,[86] but in the absence of some legislative delegation the inferior body ordinarily lacks power to authorize the establishment of a ferry.[87] The inferior body, to whom power is delegated, is the agent of the state, and the license to establish the ferry, when granted by the inferior body, is still one emanating from the state.[88] The delegation of this authority to an inferior body does not prevent the legislature from exercising the same right,[89] and, when a ferry is established by a direct legislative grant, no further license from the inferior body is necessary.[90] The legislature has the same right in cases where the authority of the inferior body is conferred by a state constitution,[91] unless its power in this regard is expressly denied.[92] It has been held that delegation of power to grant a ferry franchise will not be inferred from statute giving an inferior body control over county highways.[93]

Recall of power. The power delegated to one inferior body may be recalled, expressly or by implication, and delegated to another.[94]

b. Limitations on Power of Inferior Body

The scope and extent of the power of an inferior body to establish ferries and grant ferry privileges should be sought in the statutes conferring the power and must be exercised in conformity therewith.

The extent of the authority to establish ferries delegated to the inferior body depends on the construction of the statute delegating the power;[95] but a general authority granted to an inferior body to establish ferries may be limited by implication by the terms of a subsequent legislative grant of a ferry franchise.[96] The inferior body must act in strict conformity with the law by which its powers are conferred, and when its authority is limited any act done in excess of such authority is void.[97] Where the act done is separable into authorized and unauthorized parts, the grant is void only as to the unauthorized part,[98] and where the act is separable into parts, any one of which, by itself, would be in excess of the granting power's authority, but which are within that authority when taken in the aggregate, it is valid.[99]

Exclusive franchises. The inferior body, by a grant of an exclusive ferry privilege, cannot divest itself of power to perform its full duty, under the statute, to the public.[1] On the other hand, where a county court has exhausted its powers by granting an exclusive privilege to establish a toll bridge, it may not thereafter grant a franchise to establish a competing ferry,[2] and, despite the fact that the county court has been annually granting a franchise to run a ferry, where it thereafter grants a necessarily exclusive franchise to establish a toll bridge it cannot, after consummation of the latter franchise by the putting of such bridge into operation, grant any further license for the competing ferry.[3]

§ 9. Prescription

It is more generally held that a ferry franchise may be acquired by prescription.

By the weight of authority a ferry franchise may be acquired by prescription,[4] the prescriptive right resting on the presumption of an original grant raised by continuous enjoyment of the ferry privilege for the requisite number of years.[5] This presumption may be rebutted by evidence showing that no grant ever was made.[6] The length of possession necessary to raise the presumption of a lost grant varies in the different states, in some states following the English term of twenty years,[7] and in others following the term fixed in the state limitation acts.[8]

It is held, however, in a few jurisdictions, that a ferry franchise cannot be acquired by prescription,[9] although the right to land upon the property of another may be.[10]

§ 10. Who May Acquire Franchise

a. In general
b. Preferential rights of riparian owners

a. In General

Within statutory limitations natural persons, private corporations, and municipalities may be the recipients of ferry franchises, and riparian ownership is prerequisite to acquisition of such a franchise only where made so by statute.

It is not necessary that a ferry franchise should be granted to a single individual; it may be granted to several persons together,[11] or to a corporation,[12] except where the language of the act shows that only natural persons were intended as grantees;[13] but a corporation may be restricted in its right to acquire a ferry franchise by the provisions of its charter,[14] and may not be granted a ferry franchise in violation of statutory inhibitions.[15] The legislature may authorize a municipal corporation to ac-

Where proposed ferry was within inhibition of statute creating Chesapeake Bay Bridge Authority and prohibiting operation of ferry within twenty miles of proposed bridge, quire and operate a public ferry,[16] and a ferry franchise may be granted to a municipal corporation,[17] except where the act of incorporation does not authorize it to exercise ferry rights.[18] It is not necessary, except where the law expressly requires ownership, that the grantee should own the land where the ferry is located.[19] Mere priority in filing a petition for a ferry license by one of several competing claimants whose petitions are considered together does not confer a right to the license on the prior claimant in preference to the others.[20]

b. Preferential Rights of Riparian Owners

Under statutes prevailing in many jurisdictions a riparian owner is accorded a preferential, but not an absolute, right to a ferry franchise to be used at the place where his land is located, in some jurisdictions defeated if a public highway exists at the ferry landing but in others recognized even though such highway exists at such place. The preference of the riparian owner is exclusive if he owns both banks but not otherwise, although either of two riparian owners will be preferred to a stranger.

Under statutory rules prevailing in many jurisdictions a preference is accorded the owner of land where the ferry is to be located,[21] which preferential right is exclusive if the proprietor owns or controls the land on both banks.[22] Where the opposite banks are owned by different persons, one is not entitled to a preference over the other,[23] but either will be preferred to one not a landowner.[24] Under some statutes the preferential right of the riparian owner is not defeated by existence of an easement for a public highway or wharf at the ferry landing,[25] but other statutes have been construed not to give the riparian owner a preference at points where public roads have been established across streams.[26]

These statutes do not give to the owner an absolute right to have a ferry established upon his land, but only make him a preferred claimant for the right whenever the proper authorities have decided that the establishment of a ferry is necessary.[27] If the landowner fails or refuses to avail himself of his right or is adjudged not to be a proper person to exercise the franchise, it may be granted to another.[28] In such cases, before making the grant, the owner of the land must be given notice of the application for the establishment of the proposed ferry.[29] One tenant in common of riparian land may acquire a ferry franchise,[30] but it is improper to grant such a right to one tenant without notice to or default in the others.[31]

In Kentucky

(1) In a decision which decided merely that the owner of land on the Ohio River was entitled to a ferry franchise as against one not a landowner, and where the court expressly declined to decide whether or not a ferry franchise could be granted an applicant not an owner, to operate from a point in the highway, the court went on to add: "The right to a ferry on the Ohio river being a franchise incident to a freehold in the land, the owner of the land where it is proposed to establish a ferry, or the person to whom he has transferred the ferry rights, is the only person entitled to a grant of ferry privileges."—Walker v. Trail, 74 S.W.2d 345, 346, 255 Ky. 336.

(2) Despite differences under earlier statutes, the rule under Ky.St. § 1803, providing that a ferry shall be established for the benefit of the owner of the land on which it is located, or of some one who has obtained the ferry privilege from the owner, is the same as to the Ohio River and other waters, and either the owner or one to whom he has transferred the ferry privilege may receive the grant of a ferry franchise.—Burke v. Layoff, 199 S.W. 775, 178 Ky. 588—25 C.J. p 1056 note 95 [a] (3).

(3) Earlier Kentucky cases discussing ownership as a prerequisite to acquisition of a ferry privilege see 25 C.J. p 1056 note 95 [a].

In West Virginia, under a statute providing that any person "who owns or has contracted for the use of land at the point at which he wishes to establish the same, may present his application" for a ferry, a person who owns land on the West Virginia side of the Ohio river may make application for a ferry.—Sistersville Ferry Co. v. the person in possession to a ferry franchise as riparian owner,[32] while under the statutes in other states actual possession of lands, in the absence of other proof, places the one in possession on the same footing as the owner.[33] A preëmption right to land on both banks of a river unaccompanied by possession will not, however, entitle the owner to exclusive ferry privileges under a statute giving a right to an exclusive ferry franchise only to those who own the land, or have possession of it by preemption right, or settlement, on both opposite banks of a river.[34]

Evidence of title. A certificate of the register of the land office is sufficient evidence of the ownership of the land to give the owner preferential rights to a ferry franchise, and the applicant's title cannot be further inquired into in the hearing on his petition.[35]

Recovery of land by rightful owner does not operate to revoke the franchise of the person in possession,[36] nor to vest title to the franchise in the owner of the land.[37]

§ 11. Proceedings to Acquire Franchise

a. In general
b. Hearing and contest
c. Record
d. Acceptance of grant and fixing of rates
e. Bond and costs
f. Review
g. Acquisition by lease or purchase

a. In General

Ordinarily application for a ferry franchise should be made formally in compliance with statutory regulations and on notice to those entitled to contest the grant.

In the execution of the power to establish ferries conferred on an inferior body there must be a compliance with the statutory requirements.[38] In general, a formal application should be made[39] by one entitled to acquire the franchise,[40] stating the location of the proposed ferry[41] and the applicant's ownership of the land or other facts essential to his right to receive the franchise.[42]

Notice. The giving of notice of application in compliance with statutory requirements is a condition precedent to issuance of a ferry franchise, and the requirement of notice has been held jurisdictional, so that an order for issuance of a ferry franchise or license issued on proceedings as to which the required notice was not given is void.[43] The notice is usually required to be given, either publicly by posting notices[44] or personally on certain persons,[45] so that anyone entitled to contest the granting of the application may have an opportunity to do so.[46] Although the statute may fail expressly to prescribe the contents of the notice, it has been held that notice of a ferry application should set forth the point at which it is to be established and that such point should be one within the jurisdiction of the court to which the application is to be made.[47] Where the applicant proposes to supplant an existing ferry by establishing another in lieu of it, the notice should contain a claim that the existing ferry cannot properly do all of the business, or that the public convenience requires another ferry.[48] Statutory requirements as to affidavit of publication of notice must be complied with.[49]

In the cases of ferries over boundary waters, the power to establish which is discussed supra § 7 c, the applicant for a license to operate a ferry over waters forming the boundary between two counties should secure permission from the proper authorities in each of such counties, and where either coun-

Particular statutory requirements
Code 1907 § 3029, providing for publication of notices before issuance of ferry license, contemplates the notice shall state place of operation, one point of which shall be within jurisdiction of the issuing commissioners' court, and at a public river crossing where intersected by a public road on each side.—Pitts v. ty has denied the application the judgment operates as a bar in respect of both counties.[50]

Application by railroad. Where a railroad has discontinued a formerly operated general ferry service it may not claim the benefit of a statutory exception permitting operation of an existing ferry without first obtaining a certificate of public convenience and necessity,[51] and the fact that on the effective date of the statute the railroad was operating a passenger ferry in connection with its railroad business does not bring it within the exception in favor of ferries existing on such date, as respects the necessity of obtaining the certificate in order to operate a general ferry.[52] Since operation of a vehicular ferry is in no proper sense an adjunct to a railroad passenger ferry service, the railroad may not avoid the necessity for a ferry certificate for the vehicular ferry by merely filing a tariff for the latter on the assumption that it constitutes a mere addition of a commodity for the railroad ferry service it already operates.[53]

b. Hearing and Contest

Only persons whose rights may be affected may contest the application for a ferry franchise or privilege, and on the hearing controverted questions of fact may be passed on. On an application for establishment of an additional ferry the question of public need is in issue, and under some statutes there is no authority to issue a certificate where service already exists for the territory to which the application relates. The question of what territory is served by another ferry is one of fact to be determined by the department asked to issue the new ferry certificate.

Anyone whose rights may be interfered with may appear and contest the granting of the application;[54] but not one with no rights which can be affected.[55] The owner of a prior established ferry is under no obligation to appear and contest the application,[56] but if he does so, and the proceedings are erroneous, his remedy is by appeal, and not by injunction to restrain the other ferry.[57] Controverted questions of fact may be passed on at the hearing.[58] On hearing of the application, the finding of the jury on the issue whether public convenience will result from the establishment of a proposed ferry, for which proceedings statutory provision is made in some states, is merely evidence, and the weight of it under all the circumstances is a matter for the discretion of the court.[59] The ownership of an existing ferry, in controversy between different claimants, cannot be settled in a proceeding to establish a new ferry.[60]

Additional ferry service. On an application for establishment of a ferry to perform substantially the same service as that of one already established, the first question for determination is the public need for such additional service,[61] and where adequate ferry service already exists the application may be denied.[62] The burden of showing the public need is on the applicant for an additional ferry.[63] Under some statutes the department is unauthorized to issue a ferry certificate to a competing line where the territory is already served by another,[64] and determination of this issue must be made by the department before it can issue a ferry certificate.[65] If the service of the existing ferry line is inadequate it should on due notice be ordered

Consistency of findings as to public need

A statement in the opinion of a commission, if construed as a finding, that operation of a new boat by an existing ferry company resulted in the furnishing of adequate service was not necessarily inconsistent with its grant of a franchise to a new ferry company on the implied finding that public convenience required establishment of an additional ferry, where under the facts the first statement could well have referred to "off times" of travel during which existing service was adequate and the second finding to times of greater travel when additional facilities were requisite.—San Diego & Coronado Ferry Co. v. Railroad Commission of California, 292 P. 640, 210 Cal. 504.

Adequate service rendered at a loss

Where adequate service is performed by established ferry at financial loss, and it does not appear that additional ferry will be of material benefit, or that travel will support reasonably well two adequately equipped and properly attended ferries, county court should refuse franchise for additional ferry.—Greene v. Lane, supra.

Omission of finding fatal

Statement of opinion by department of public works indicating lack to supplement its service as necessary, and in the absence of a finding and order as to supplemental service an application by a new and competing ferry line should be denied.[66] The question of what territory is already served by an existing ferry, when arising on application for a license to establish a new ferry, is a question of fact,[67] to be determined in the light of existing economic conditions and a consideration of the kinds, means, and methods of travel and the size of the population to be served,[68] and under the practice in some jurisdictions such question will be decided by the department of public works in the first instance.[69] It has been held that no holder of a certificate of public necessity and convenience for operation of a ferry may be compelled as a condition precedent to holding his route free from competition to establish and maintain a new ferry route when it is admitted that such new service can be installed and maintained only at a loss.[70]

"Good faith" certificate. Under statutes providing for issuance of a ferry certificate to one who on a specified date was operating a ferry over the route for which the certificate is sought, an applicant who on such date was operating a boat service not falling within the definition of "ferry" is not entitled to such certificate,[71] and, not being so entitled, could not secure a ferry certificate under general provisions of the statutes until the department had tried and determined the question of whether his operation would invade territory already served.[72]

c. Record

It has been held that to support a grant of a ferry license the record must show the existence of all jurisdictional facts, but other authority is to the effect that this may be shown by evidence dehors the record. If the record affirmatively shows the absence of jurisdictional facts the purported grant of a ferry license is void.

In accordance with the general rule with respect to the proceedings of inferior courts and tribunals, as discussed in Courts §§ 104–106, it has been held that in order to support the grant of a ferry license or franchise the record of the proceedings must show the existence of all jurisdictional facts,[73] such as the giving of the prescribed notice,[74] and that an insufficient record in this respect cannot be aided by oral evidence.[75] On the other hand, it has been held that if the jurisdictional facts exist, and a license or franchise is issued by the proper board or other body, it is valid, although such facts are not made a matter of record;[76] that in the absence of evidence to the contrary the license is prima facie sufficient to show the right of the licensee to establish and operate the ferry, the presumption being in favor of the regularity of the proceedings;[77] and that evidence, other than the record, is competent to show the facts.[78] Where the record af-of necessity for finding that territory for which certificate was sought was not already served held insufficient and fatal to validity of order granting certificate.—State v. Department of Public Works of Washington, supra.

firmatively shows the absence of a jurisdictional fact, such as legal notice of the proceedings pursuant to which a ferry franchise or license was issued, the purported grant is void.[79]

d. Acceptance of Grant and Fixing of Rates

A grant of a ferry license must be accepted by the grantee to become effective, and it has been held that the ferry is not established until the accepting grantee has furnished essential facilities and begun operation. The order establishing a ferry need not fix rates, which may be fixed by later order.

A legislative grant of a ferry franchise must be accepted by the grantee, or by all the grantees, if more than one, before it will become operative.[80] The grant of a license by an inferior body to establish a ferry is complete when a definite order that the ferry be settled, laid out, and established has been made and the required bond has been executed,[81] and such order operates as a valid establishment of the ferry,[82] although according to some authorities the ferry is not established until the grantee has provided the necessary facilities and has begun to operate the ferry for the public.[83]

Fixing rates. Unless otherwise provided by statute, an order establishing a ferry need not fix the rates of toll; this may be done by a separate and independent order.[84]

e. Bond and Costs

An applicant for a ferry license may be obligated to give a bond where statute so requires. The applicant is not liable for costs of the proceeding in the absence of statute making him so.

The grantee of the franchise is in some cases required to give bond,[85] and to renew his bond at fixed periods;[86] but statutes requiring the applicant for a ferry license to give covenant to pay damages for negligence do not apply to the agent through whom the owner or lessee operates the ferry.[87]

Costs. A contestant is not liable for costs in the absence of statute providing therefor.[88]

f. Review

The order of a court or other body granting or denying a ferry franchise is ordinarily open to review, although it will be sustained as to discretionary matters in the absence of abuse of discretion. It has been held that anyone interested may appeal such an order whether or not a formal party to the proceedings below. The judgment of a court establishing a ferry is not open to collateral attack except on jurisdictional grounds, and the regularity of the proceedings will be presumed on such an attack.

Under statutes regulating procedure in the granting of ferry franchises, a review may generally be had by appeal,[89] error,[90] or certiorari.[91] Noncompliance with statutory requirements is reversible error.[92] The exercise of discretion in determining whether the public convenience requires the establishment of a ferry is not unlimited and may be reviewed,[93] but will not be interfered with where it does not clearly appear to have been abused.[94] Amendments in the interest of justice have been permitted on appeal, where no one was prejudiced thereby.[95] Where the statute gives a state depart-

License issued by commissioners' court of general jurisdiction

That the commissioners' court issued a ferry license subsequent to acquiring general jurisdiction of ferries, under Code 1907 § 3312, does not dispense with, but merely raises presumption of, jurisdictional fact of thirty-day prior notice necessary under § 3029 (which previously dealt with that court as of limited jurisdiction) to validity of licenses; and affirmative showing that the ferry connecting road was established only four days prior to license rendered the order of the court void on its face and subject to collateral attack.—Pitts v. Boggs, supra.

ment original jurisdiction of applications for ferry licenses and on review by the court the latter decides that there should be a finding on a question left unanswered by the department, it is not the function of the court itself to pass on such question but it should remit the case to the department with instructions to make a finding as to such omitted matter.[96]

Who may appeal. Under statutes giving the right to appeal to anyone interested, an appeal by interested parties to the circuit court from an order of the county court granting a ferry franchise will not be dismissed because appellants filed no pleadings and were not parties in the proceedings below.[97]

Collateral attack. The establishment of a ferry is a judicial act, and the judgment of a court establishing a ferry, like any other judgment, cannot be attacked in a collateral proceeding,[98] except in respect of lack of a jurisdictional fact rendering the judgment void.[99] On a collateral attack the only point in issue is whether the judgment respecting the grant of a ferry franchise was void,[1] and the regularity of the prior proceedings before a court of original and exclusive jurisdiction will ordinarily be presumed;[2] but a judgment as to a ferry franchise is open to collateral attack where it is void for uncertainty.[3]

g. Acquisition by Lease or Purchase

Under the statutory practice in some jurisdictions the highest bidder at public auction may acquire ferry privileges by lease or purchase, but is not entitled to exercise his franchise until he has complied with all conditions imposed.

Under statutes in some jurisdictions the right to establish a ferry may be sold or leased at public auction to the highest bidder;[4] but a statute relating to franchises generally and providing for their sale to the highest bidder will not apply where the statute relating specifically to ferry franchises contains different requirements.[5] The terms of sale

Second application

Tyree, supra.

Failure to execute bond as not jurisdictional

Failure to execute bond at the time of granting ferry franchise, and failure of the court to make an order concerning the rate of tolls, did not render the judgment void, such omissions being errors only that did not affect the jurisdiction of the court.—Decker v. Tyree, 264 S.W. 726, 204 Ky. 302.

Matter of abandonment or forfeiture not in issue

In view of Ky.St. § 1820, prohibiting establishment of ferry within four hundred yards of another, an application for franchise within prohibited distance, on sole ground that existing ferry was without right, is a collateral attack on the existing franchise, and only matter for inquiry is whether it is void, question of abandonment or forfeiture not being at issue.—Adkins v. Ashland & Ironton Transfer & Ferry Co., 276 S.W. 131, 210 Ky. 532.

2. Ky.—Adkins v. Ashland & Ironton Transfer & Ferry Co., supra.

After lapse of great time

In a collateral attack on a franchise granted by county court having original and exclusive jurisdiction, it is presumed that all statutory and jurisdictional requirements were complied with, especially where there is a great lapse of time since granting of franchise, so that absence of an order showing required notice will not render franchise void.—Adkins v. Ashland & Ironton Transfer & Ferry Co., supra.

Lack of jurisdiction not appearing affirmatively

On collateral attack where lack of jurisdiction does not appear affirmatively, it will be presumed, particularly after lapse of eighty years, that statutory and jurisdictional requirements were complied with in granting a ferry franchise and that county court had jurisdiction to grant the franchise, although order does not show that party to whom it was granted was citizen or resident of the county or owned land in the county or abutting on the river, or that the ferry was established from his land, or that he gave notice to the owner of land on the opposite side of the river.—Smith v. Effect of creation of Port Authority

The power of New York City to lease a ferry franchise between New York and New Jersey under Greater New York Charter has not been taken away by legislation creating Port of New York Authority.—Murray v. imposed by the statute control,[6] and the highest bidder is not entitled to exercise the franchise until he has complied with all its conditions.[7] Irregularities in the manner of exercising the right to sell a ferry franchise at public auction may be ratified or cured by estoppel.[8]

Disputes respecting rental. Bona fide disputes respecting the computation of rental due the public from ferry lessees may be settled by appropriate agreement of the parties.[9]

Valuation of property at termination of lease. Where the United States takes over operation of a leased ferry line under agreement during time of war, and where the original lease provides for payment of increased value at the termination of the lease, in determining what price the United States is to pay the lessee for increased value it has been held that the properties should be valued by prewar prices rather than by wartime prices.[10]

Renewal or extension of lease contract. A new contract for the lease of ferry privileges to an operator cannot be construed as a renewal or extension of an existing lease in contradiction of express recitals to the contrary in such new contract.[11]

§ 12. Nature, Requisites, Construction, and Extent of Franchise

a. In general
b. Requisites and construction of grant
c. Duration and extent of grant

a. In General

A ferry franchise is "property" and is ordinarily regarded as a contract between the grantee and the state. The franchise comprises not only the right to establish the ferry, with landings and boats, but also the right to operate it, subject to the general public right to use navigable waters and the right of the federal government to improve the waterway for purposes of navigation.

A ferry franchise consists not merely in the establishment of a ferry with its landing and boats, but in its operation as a ferry,[12] and a grant of authority to maintain a ferry carries with it, by necessary implication, the right to acquire what is essential to its operation.[13] A ferry right, when exercised over navigable waters, is subject to the right of the public to use the waters as a highway,[14] and to the right of the federal government to improve the waterway for purposes of navigation;[15] but, where the landing place is owned by the owner of the ferry franchise, steamboats navigating the river as common carriers have no right, without the ferry owner's consent, to receive and discharge passengers or freight at the ferry landing.[16]

Ferry franchise as property. A ferry franchise is property and is entitled as such to the same protection as any other property.[17] Although there is

Termination of lease before expiration of term

Where ferries were leased in 1909 for ten years, and lessor agreed to pay lessee difference between value of equipment at beginning and at termination of lease, if value was greater at termination, and in 1918 government took over operation of ferries, and it was provided that former lease should terminate, and that United States should pay lessee whatever he was entitled to, it was held that equipment was to be valued according to prewar prices in determining amount to which lessee was entitled.—Ferries Co. v. authority to the contrary,[18] it is generally classed as real property,[19] and should, as shown infra § 17, be conveyed in the manner provided for conveyances of realty. It is an incorporeal hereditament.[20]

The grantee may acquire no property rights under a void ferry franchise.[21]

Contractual character. Broadly speaking a ferry franchise constitutes a contract between the owner and the state.[22] A legislative act in derogation of a former grant by the state is void,[23] but, where the legislature has reserved the right to amend or repeal a ferry franchise or charter, subsequent legislation effecting such change is valid and enforceable.[24] Where the right of repeal is reserved on failure of the grantee to perform certain duties imposed on him, the legislature may repeal the grant without a judicial ascertainment of nonperformance by the grantee, the question whether he has in fact failed, so as to make the repeal effectual, being for the courts.[25]

Where the ferry privilege is a mere license to operate acquired under a general law, no contractual relationship arises,[26] and a license so given will be subject to rights under a franchise where the two are conflicting,[27] even where the license is given by the federal government, and the franchise rights are granted by the state from a point in the state to property belonging to the federal government, provided the ferry licensed by the federal government is not a necessary incident to the execution of government work;[28] but a license, renewed annually, will be as effective to confer exclusive privileges, as long as it is not revoked, as a franchise.[29]

b. Requisites and Construction of Grant

Any language sufficiently evincing the legislative intent may be adequate to confer a ferry franchise irrespective of form. Ambiguities in ferry grants may be construed to effectuate rather than to defeat the grant, but in respect of the privileges given they are ordinarily subject to a strict construction in favor of the government.

Any words which clearly show the intention of the legislature to grant a ferry franchise are sufficient, no set form being necessary.[30] In construing such grants, in cases of ambiguity, a construction will be given which will make the grant effective rather than one which will entirely defeat it, if such a construction is within the reasonable meaning of the terms employed;[31] but as to the privileges conferred, ferry franchises have generally been held to fall within the rule of strict construction against the grantee and in favor of the

Not a contract with county or municipality

A ferry franchise obtained by entry of a county court's judgment establishing the ferry flows, not from any action on the part of any local governing body, but from the action of the legislature as expressed in the ferry statute; hence, the franchise is not a contract between the owner and the county or municipality, but is one between him and the state.—Tri-State Ferry Co. v. government,[32] although there is authority holding that the rule of strict construction against the grantee is not applicable to the grant of a ferry franchise, which is never without a consideration.[33]

c. Duration and Extent of Grant

In the absence of limitation by statute, constitution, or the terms of the grant, a grant of a ferry franchise will be construed as in perpetuity; but the right to a ferry franchise arising from riparian ownership is not perpetual but subject to defeat if the public interest subsequently so demands. The grant of a ferry franchise ordinarily extends to two or more termini and includes a two-way operation.

It has been broadly held that in the absence of constitutional or statutory restriction, or a limitation in the grant, a ferry franchise is perpetual,[34] and that under such conditions the franchise will not be void because unlimited as to time.[35] On the other hand, the right to a ferry franchise arising from riparian ownership, which right is rendered effectual by a series of grants for limited periods, is not a right in perpetuity, and despite long continued exercise of such right it may subsequently be defeated by refusal of the public authorities to renew the ferry franchise where it is not in the public interest to do so.[36]

Termini. A grant of a ferry franchise usually describes the ferry to be established as lying between two or more designated points,[37] but this is not essential where it is impracticable to do so.[38] Generality in the description of the termini will not affect the validity of the grant on a petition for certiorari to quash the proceedings of the inferior body making it, while it may be taken advantage of in an action brought for alleged infringement of the franchise.[39]

One-way or both-way ferry. A legislative grant of a ferry franchise across a river from a place on one side to a place on the other side, standing alone and unexplained, will ordinarily be construed to give the right of ferriage across the river between the two places in both directions; but other portions of the grant, and other acts in pari materia, and the actual user under them in connection with the surrounding circumstances may limit the grant to a ferry in one direction only, by showing that such was the legislative intent.[40]

§ 13. —— Exclusiveness of Franchise

a. In general
b. Power to make franchise exclusive

a. In General

The ancient common-law doctrine that a ferry franchise was inherently exclusive does not apply in the United States, where such franchises are deemed exclusive only if made so by express language or necessary implication. In the absence of an exclusive grant, the proper authorities may permit establishment of such additional ferries as public convenience and necessity may require.

At common law a ferry franchise was in its nature exclusive of contiguous competition;[41] but this ancient doctrine of the common law is inapplicable to the local and political institutions of the United States.[42]

Although a licensed ferryman may be protected against competition of a completely unauthorized and unlicensed character,[43] the rule generally prevailing in this country is that a prior ferry franchise will not be considered exclusive of other and authorized competition unless made so by express language or by necessary implication,[44] and that, in the absence of statute, there is no particular limit within which the keeper of a public ferry is secure against the establishment of another public ferry.[45] Where, however, the governing statutes or the terms of the grant by express language or by necessary implication show such intent, the grant of ferry privileges will be deemed exclusive, as in the case of an exclusive ferry franchise or license for a specified period,[46] and other ferries may not be established within prescribed limits of existing ferries in violation of special acts or general laws protecting the existing ferry against such competition.[47] Such prohibiting acts have no retroactive effect on ferries already established within the prohibited limits,[48] and an exclusive ferry franchise is limited as to time in that it does not survive repeal of the act on which it is founded in the absence of a saving clause.[49] Under laws prohibiting establishment of other ferries within a limited distance, an exception may be made where the public necessities demand other ferries, or in regard to certain localities or conditions, as in the case of ferries located on certain rivers or at or near cities or towns or rendered necessary by the establishment of public highways.[50] Where it is shown that a public highway is established on one shore, but not on the other, the case is brought within the statutory exception.[51]

It has been said that the grant of a ferry franchise by the legislature of a state for a specified period is, unless limited by general law or the terms of the grant, by necessary implication exclusive to the extent of the privileges thus conferred,[52] and that the purpose of statutes forbidding establishment of another ferry within a designated distance of one established by the legislature is to prevent county authorities from establishing another ferry within such proscribed area.[53] Where a granting statute authorizes a given person or his assigns to establish and maintain a ferry for a specified period after a certain date and between specified towns over specified waters, and further provides that no other ferry shall be operated within a given distance of the ferry thus established, the statute will be construed as granting a ferry franchise exclusive in character, but, under a reserved power of revocation in such statutory grant, it will be deemed that the franchise is at the outset an exclusive, vested right to operate a ferry subject to subsequent revocation for adequate cause.[54]

In the absence of an exclusive grant, the legislature or other proper authority may establish as many additional ferries at or near the same place as public convenience and necessity may require.[55] It is for the legislature, or other body vested with jurisdiction to establish the second ferry, to determine whether the public convenience requires a second ferry,[56] and such decision cannot be questioned in a collateral action.[57] The right to operate a ferry over the same route as another ferry depends on express grant and will not be implied.[58] Exclusive ferry privileges, founded on a general legislative act prohibiting the licensing of other ferries within a specified distance of an established ferry, have been held not to invade private rights, or to bestow special privileges, or to interfere with the free right of navigation.[59]

Existing but unauthorized ferry. Despite the protection against competition furnished to legally established ferries, where a ferry is maintained without authority, the mere fact that the operator furnishes ferry service at a given point will not preclude the grant of the application of another to establish a ferry at the same point.[60]

b. Power to Make Franchise Exclusive

The legislature has power to confer an exclusive ferry franchise and under proper legislative sanction an inferior body may grant such a franchise in the exercise of its delegated power. The exercise of the power to grant exclusive ferry franchises is, however, subject to limitations affecting navigable waters and to limitations inherent in the sovereignty of the granting body.

The legislature may, subject to the restrictions mentioned, make the grant of a ferry franchise exclusive.[61] The delegation of authority to an inferior body merely to grant licenses does not carry with it, by implication, a right to confer exclusive privileges;[62] nor is the power to be implied where the delegation of authority is in terms giving the inferior body full jurisdiction over ferries,[63] or where it is empowered to lay out ferries and authorize the construction of them,[64] or to authorize the establishment of such ferries as it may think necessary,[65] or to appoint and settle ferries.[66] The delegation of authority, however, may be construed to give the right to grant exclusive privileges, where the authority delegated is expressed to be the same as that which before belonged to the delegating body,[67] and a power to grant or refuse licenses has been construed to give that right.[68]

Limitations on exercise of power. The grant of an exclusive privilege is always taken subject to the rights of the public on navigable waters,[69] and subject to the right of the federal government to make such improvements in these waters as may be necessary in its regulation of interstate commerce.[70] Statutes granting exclusive ferry franchises have been held inapplicable to preclude the subsequent establishment of free ferries within the competing area by a state agency.[71]

Statutory restrictions as to establishment of a new ferry within a designated distance of one already existing refer only to grants by the same sovereignty,[72] and, as shown supra § 7 c, they cannot prevent the establishment of a ferry by an adjoining state over a boundary river. Ordinarily the authorities of one county may not confer a ferry franchise over boundary waters exclusive of the rights of riparian owners in a different county.[73]

Unauthorized grant of exclusive ferry privileges. A contract purportedly granting one an exclusive ferry franchise is ineffective where governing statutes fail to give the grantor official power to make such a grant.[74]

Where a grant from an inferior body purports to convey an exclusive ferry privilege, and the body may not grant such exclusive privilege, the grant is good to the extent of the right of the inferior body.[75]

§ 14. —— Right to Collect Tolls

Ordinarily the grant of a ferry franchise implies power to collect tolls, but no such implication will be indulged where conditions attached to the grant preclude collection of tolls. The right to collect tolls generally extends to collection from all users other than those expressly agreed to be carried free of charge.

In the absence of contrary conditions attached to the grant of a ferry privilege,[76] the grant of a ferry franchise implies in its very nature the taking of tolls by the grantee,[77] and the right to collect tolls exists as long as the right or duty of operating the ferry continues.[78] The right to col-

State highway commission
Statutes prohibiting operation of other ferries within a given distance of an existing ferry do not preclude a state highway commission from establishing a free ferry, as part of a highway, within the prohibited distance of an established ferry, where the statutes authorize such state agency to invade the competitive limits and where its contract with the federal government makes a ferry or bridge at such point prerequisite to receipt of federal aid.—State Highway Commission v. Contract with highway commissioner; power resting in county Ferry operator's contract with highway commissioner, purportedly granting him exclusive right of operating ferry as link in state highway, is ineffective, since statutes defining commissioner's powers do not divest county courts of their jurisdiction of ferries.—McCrary v. Harrell, supra.

Ferry maintained by taxation
Where the power granted a county to establish and maintain a ferry was coupled with the requirement that it be done by taxation, and the ferry was thus made a public charge, the money for its establishment and maintenance coming from the taxpayers, it had no power to collect tolls and, if it did so, was acting ultra vires.—Deans v. lect toll is a right to collect from all persons using the ferry in crossing,[79] but not from persons crossing in other boats and using the ferry merely in landing,[80] or entitled to free passage because of a reservation in the sale or lease of a ferry franchise,[81] or because of an agreement for free passage entered into between the person claiming the privilege and the ferry owner,[82] with the reservation, however, that a ferryman cannot bind his successors to the performance of such agreement.[83] A ferryman can collect no greater toll than is allowed by statute.[84] Where a statute fixes rates for wagons, a ferryman cannot charge for the contents of a wagon separately from the wagon, although the wagon and contents belong to different persons.[85] Under a statute fixing the rate for vehicles according to size or capacity, and not according to the number of passengers therein, no charge may be made for bona fide passengers crossing in vehicles.[86] Where a passenger is obliged to pay a greater rate than that allowed by law, the excess, if not voluntarily paid, may be recovered.[87]

Collection of tolls by distress. In some states a power of distress to enforce the right to tolls is given to a ferry company, and such a provision has been held to be valid.[88]

A ferry franchise ordinarily does not carry with it the right to use landings at places other than public highways, but, in the case of public ferries whose termini are public highways, the franchise usually includes the right to use landings at such points.

As to public ferries at places other than public highways, the legislative grant of the franchise does not of itself confer on the grantee the right of landing and embarking on private property on the shores of the water over which the ferry is operated,[89] nor is such right conferred by a statutory provision that a person operating a public ferry and owning land on one side of a stream shall have the privilege of landing his ferryboat on the opposite shore and of making the landing and road up the bank.[90] In order to render his franchise effective, the grantee of the franchise must acquire the right to use the landing on both sides of the water for the purpose of landing and embarking,[91] but it is not necessary that the ferry owner should secure a title in fee to the land at the landing place, and a statute authorizing the acquirement of landing rights does not impliedly require the ferry owner to acquire the fee thereto.[92] A grant of the right of landing and embarking may be presumed from usage,[93] which may be rebutted by evidence tending to show a permissive use.[94] It has been held that, where a riparian owner who would be a preferred claimant for the franchise fails to apply for it, he waives the right to object to this use of his land by the person to whom the franchise is granted.[95] Under a statute providing that no other ferry line shall make or maintain a landing place at a certain place used by plaintiff without written consent of the utilities commission, but that "nothing herein shall be construed to . . . impair the existing vested rights of any other transportation company," the assignee of the existing, vested rights of another transportation company is protected in its use of such place as much as if it had been directly named as excepted in such statute.[96]

Designation of landing place. The designation of places for ferry landings along river banks within the limits of a town is a function primarily belonging to the town. Ordinarily the town's designation is not subject to judicial control, but, where the town proceeds on an erroneous theory and plainly deviates from its duty in the premises, equity may grant relief.[97] On a judicial designation of landing places for both ferries, the owner of the previously established ferry is entitled to no further relief, and he may not exclude an additional and competing ferry on the ground of his prior use of the bank as a landing place, or on the ground that he owns the adjacent lots where, under the law of the state, his ownership is subject to a servitude for public use because the lots owned are on the banks of a navigable stream.[98]

Rights of ferry operator as against owner or lessee of uplands and shore lands. The operator of a ferry using certain landings for many years, and eventually granted a license, acquires an interest in the shore land which the law will protect as against a trespasser or wrongdoer, and a private person, charged with notice of such use and of the public's long continued use of the ferry and the highways crossing the shore lands and uplands to the ferry landings when purchasing uplands and later leasing such shore lands as an upland proprietor, cannot interfere with the public use or operation of the ferry. In such a case whatever rights the purchaser may have acquired in the shore land by virtue of his purchase of the upland are subject to the dominant servitude of the easement of the ferry operator which may be extended over the uplands to abutting shore lands leased by such purchaser.[99]

Under deed or lease. The scope of the right to land or embark under a deed or lease depends on the terms of the instrument as construed by the court.[1]

A mere personal license to use a landing place terminates on a transfer by the licensee.[2]

Termini in public highways. As to public ferries whose termini are public highways, the grant of the franchise carries with it whatever rights the public then has or may afterward acquire to the use of the highway for this purpose.[3] Where the public, by dedication or condemnation, has title to the roadbed, the grantee of the ferry franchise has a right to use the highway for landing and embarking,[4] but not to make such a use of the right as to obstruct access to navigable water.[5] Where the landowner retains the fee and the public has only an easement for passage, the decisions are conflicting, some holding that this right of way includes the right to use the highway for landing and embarking,[6] while others hold that this is not so much a public use as a use by the holder of the ferry franchise for his own gain, and that it is an additional burden on the land for which compensation must be made to the owner.[7]

A public wharf may be used as a landing place on payment of lawful wharfage charges,[8] and the right to use a public wharf may be given and limited by statute.[9]

a. In General

Unauthorized establishment of another ferry within competing distance of an existing ferry constitutes an infringement of the franchise of the latter, even though there is no physical interference.

The unauthorized operation of another ferry at the same point as a lawfully established ferry or so near at hand as to divert traffic from the previously established ferry constitutes an infringement of the franchise of the latter,[10] even though there is no physical interference of one ferry with the other,[11] as where the infringement consists in operation of

Where a town assigns a landing place in actual use by an established ferry to a new and competing ferry without assigning any new landing place to the previously established ferry, and is under the same legal obligation to accord a landing place to one ferry as to the other, it violates its duty and equity may afford relief.—Town of Vidalia v. a competing ferry within a distance expressly prohibited by statute.[12] In this class of cases, the remedy may be afforded on the ground that the competing ferry is a private nuisance,[13] and damages are the gist of the action and must be proved.[14]

b. Character and Extent of Interference

Unauthorized establishment of another ferry or bridge within a proscribed or competing distance of an established ferry constitutes an infringement of the latter's franchise; but infringement of a ferry franchise ordinarily may not be shown by use of boats other than ferries, or by use of a ford, and operation of a strictly private ferry is not generally regarded as infringing the franchise of an established public ferry.

A mere casual or slight interference with an existing ferry is not necessarily actionable.[15] Where the statute or grant expressly makes the franchise exclusive within specified territorial limits, any unauthorized operation of a ferry within such limits is an infringement;[16] but, in the absence of any such express provision, there is no fixed rule as to the distance within which a ferry will be protected against unauthorized competition, further than that a rival ferry will not be permitted so near as to result in damage by diversion of traffic.[17]

Within constitutional limitations, the state may authorize establishment of a competitive ferry,[18] or it may make an irrevocable grant of an exclusive ferry franchise which will be protected by the constitution from impairment by subsequent legislation,[19] other than an exercise of the power of eminent domain involving payment of compensation,[20] and establishment of a competing ferry may, under applicable statutes and grants, constitute an infringement of an existing ferry franchise.[21]

Toll and free ferries; private ferries. Where the operation of a ferry would otherwise constitute an infringement of an existing ferry, it is none the less so because it is operated free, since the evil is the same whether tolls are charged or not;[22] but the taking of tolls or compensation may be necessary to constitute a violation of particular statutes, prohibiting only the operation of a ferry for hire,[23] or, as shown infra § 16 f, to warrant the recovery of a statutory penalty for such operation, and the taking of compensation for carriage may be decisive of the question whether defendant is operating a public ferry, and therefore guilty of infringement.[24] In all such cases where the taking of tolls is material, it is sufficient if compensation for carriage is taken either directly or indirectly.[25] As respects private ferries, it is not an infringement for persons to use their own boats within the limits of a ferry franchise in crossing themselves, their families, employees, guests, and occasionally others, where no tolls are charged;[26] but any at-

Private ferry for family and friends
While a number of persons may not combine and hire a common ferryman, share the expense, and thus establish for themselves a ferry, nevertheless a private individual may, at any place along the river, keep his private boat and ferry his family, servants, and goods, and occasionally lend his boat to another or ferry with himself a friend, in both cases without compensation.—Dunbar v. Johnson, 162 S.W.2d 25, 290 Ky. 581.

tempt to operate a private ferry within such limits for the accommodation of any considerable portion of the general public is an infringement.[27] Where a competing ferry is ostensibly private but in reality public, the courts will look through the subterfuge and enjoin unauthorized competition.[28]

Boats other than ferries. The use of vessels on navigable waters for purposes of commerce is not an infringement of a ferry franchise,[29] but such vessels have no right to use the ferry landing for the purpose of receiving and discharging freight and passengers,[30] or to use their boats to make regular ferry trips in competition with the lawfully established ferry.[31]

Bridges. Within constitutional limitations, the legislature may authorize construction of a bridge competing with an established ferry,[32] and any damage thereby caused to the ferry is damnum absque injuria.[33] In this connection it has been said that ferry rights are exclusive only as against competing ferries and not as against bridges unless expressly made so,[34] and held that, where there is a duly licensed and authorized ferry, the public authorities may also authorize a bridge in the same locality where the public welfare so demands, notwithstanding such bridge will interfere with the business and traffic of the ferry;[35] but, where the state has granted an irrevocable and exclusive franchise to a ferry, the ferry franchise may not be infringed by a bridge attempted to be authorized or operated in violation of the prior grant of exclusive ferry privileges,[36] and a competitive bridge constitutes an infringement of a ferry franchise where prohibited by statute.[37] Apart from any express statutory prohibition, however, an unauthorized competitive bridge has been held to infringe a ferry franchise,[38] and damages may be recovered for a physical interference with a ferry by building a bridge structure on the landing place and across the line of the ferry, thereby destroying the business of the ferry.[39] Where operation of a bridge would otherwise constitute an infringement of a previously established ferry, it is none the less so because it is operated without charging tolls.[40]

Free municipal bridge

A public corporation, as a city, exercises discretionary power in deciding to erect a bridge, which discretion may not be imposed on an adjoining county or municipality to which the bridge is to run, and it follows that, where a city has built a free bridge extending outside its own limits and into an adjoining county or municipality, and where construction of such bridge destroys the value of a ferry franchise granted by the county, in a suit by the ferry owner for damages, the city may not escape liability on the plea that it had made a finding of public necessity of the bridge where the county did not join in such finding.—Menzel Estate Co. v. City of Redding, 174 P. 48, 178 Cal. 475.

Whether or not a ferry constitutes a violation of an existing exclusive bridge franchise has been considered in Bridges §§ 29, 30.

Fords. Fording, or showing others a ford, is not an infringement, although it impairs the income of the ferry.[41]

Railroads. A railroad authorized to operate a ferry as a connecting link in its road may use it to transport its own freight and passengers without infringing the franchise of a regular ferry at the same place,[42] but it cannot use its boats to carry on a regular ferry business.[43]

Federal government. The United States may, in the exercise of its inherent powers of sovereignty, transport its employees, notwithstanding the existence of any exclusive ferry franchise, but its employees may not combine to maintain a ferry which interferes with an existing ferry franchise.[44]

c. Remedies Generally

On infringement of his rights a ferry operator may have relief by appropriate remedy, as by injunction or suit for damages.

A ferry operator whose rights have been infringed is entitled to relief even if he has theretofore exacted unreasonable charges from the public,[45] and, as shown in following subdivisions of this section, his remedy may be by injunction or by suit for damages.

d. Injunction

(1) In general
(2) Pleading and evidence
(3) Decree

(1) In General

Injunction is a proper remedy to protect one in the enjoyment of his ferry franchise where the legal remedy is inadequate, but plaintiff must have right or title to the ferry before he may enjoin interference therewith. A defendant may successfully interpose the defense that plaintiff has grossly neglected his duties under the franchise or been guilty of inequitable conduct precluding relief.

Injunction is a proper remedy to protect a party in the enjoyment of a ferry franchise, the equity jurisdiction resting on the ground of its necessity to avoid a multiplicity of suits and to afford adequate protection to plaintiff's property in his franchise.[46] An injunction may be denied where, under the circumstances of the particular case, the legal remedy is adequate,[47] or where the granting of an injunction would be futile.[48]

Right to maintain suit. Plaintiff must have a right or title to his ferry before he can maintain a bill to enjoin an interference with it;[49] but long actual use and enjoyment of ferry privileges has been held a sufficient title to support an injunction against one operating without authority.[50] By the weight of authority it is not necessary that the franchise be exclusive to entitle the owner to enjoin an infringement,[51] although in some courts an injunction has been refused because the franchise of complainant was not exclusive.[52]

The owner of a competing ferry is a party in interest within the meaning of statutory provisions limiting the right to seek an injunction of establishment of a ferry to a "party in interest."[53]

Ferry twenty miles distant
Operator of competing ferry some twenty miles distant is "party in interest," entitled to bring suit to enjoin construction and operation of ferry by interstate railroad pursuant to certificate of public convenience and necessity from interstate com-competent authority, is not subject to collateral attack, by way of defense, in a suit for its infringement.[54] Defendant has no standing to assert a forfeiture of plaintiff's franchise.[55] Plaintiff may be denied relief where he has so grossly neglected his duty as to make the establishment of another ferry a public necessity,[56] or where he has been guilty of using unfair means to divert traffic from defendant's licensed ferry,[57] or where he has been guilty of laches.[58] The right to an injunction is not defeated by the expiration of a ferry owner's license pendente lite where his failure to get a renewal is due to the incompetency or refusal of the authorities to act in the premises.[59] A license improperly granted to defendant to operate a ferry within a prohibited distance of plaintiff's previously licensed ferry is no bar to an injunction; the order granting such license is not binding on plaintiff and may be collaterally impeached;[60] but a valid and subsisting ferry franchise issued to defendant may afford valid ground of defense to plaintiff's suit for injunction, even though such franchise has been granted after the suit was brought.[61]

(2) Pleading and Evidence

Under the general rules of pleading and proof applicable to injunction suits, which control in suits for injunction sought to protect a ferry franchise, plaintiff should allege and prove all facts essential to his cause of action, such as establishment of his own ferry and compliance with conditions precedent to its operation.

The bill must allege a compliance with the conditions authorizing plaintiff to operate his ferry,[62] and that he has established his ferry and is offering his services to the public,[63] and all the facts necessary to show that defendant has violated or threatens to violate plaintiff's rights.[64] The bill must also allege facts showing that plaintiff's remedy at law is inadequate.[65] Where the right to an injunction depends on plaintiff's franchise being exclusive, the bill must allege that such franchise is exclusive,[66] but, where the act complained of is a trespass on plaintiff's lands, such allegation is not necessary.[67]

Evidence. Proof of the repeated issuance of annual licenses by the clerk of the county court is sufficient to make out a prima facie case of the court's establishment of a ferry.[68]

(3) Decree

A decree of injunction may be construed as inoperative after abandonment of the ferry which it protected against interference. Only the federal government may complain that such a decree invades federal rights in being directed against a competing ferry operating to a point within a federal reservation.

An injunction in broad general terms will be construed as not operative after plaintiff's ferry, which it protects, has been abandoned by the owner or discontinued by order of court.[69] Where a state court injunction forbids operation of a competing ferry between a point within a state and a point within a federal government reservation, no one but the federal government may complain that such injunction constitutes an invasion of federal rights.[70]

(1) In General

A ferry operator may recover damages for impairment of his franchise in an appropriate action, and ordinarily misconduct of plaintiff warranting forfeiture of his franchise affords no defense for damages already accrued.

An invasion of a ferry right is a nuisance, and the party aggrieved has a remedy at law in an action on the case for the disturbance,[71] except in jurisdictions where both the right and the remedy are purely statutory, in which case, in accordance with the general rule, as explained in Actions § 6, the statutory remedy is exclusive, and a common-law action for damages will not lie,[72] unless the statute expressly authorizes such an action.[73] In other jurisdictions the statutory remedy is cumulative and not exclusive of a common-law action for damages,[74] and counts on both the common-law and statutory liabilities may be joined in the same declaration.[75] The mere possession of an established ferry has been held sufficient to sustain an action for infringement of it.[76]

Impairment by bridge. Although a ferry company may not secure damages for impairment of its franchise by a bridge in condemnation proceedings by the bridge company, it might recover such damages in an independent action.[77]

Defenses. It is no defense to an action for damages that plaintiff has been guilty of conduct authorizing the forfeiture of his franchise.[78] The judgment establishing the ferry cannot be attacked by way of defense;[79] but it is a good defense that defendant's ferry is duly authorized by a competent tribunal.[80]

(2) Parties

The proprietor of a ferry is the proper party plaintiff in a suit for damages for infringement of the franchise, and joint proprietors may maintain a joint action.

The proprietor of the ferry who is entitled to the tolls is the proper party plaintiff.[81] Where a license for operating a ferry is issued to two persons jointly, they may maintain a joint action for damages for infringement.[82]

(3) Pleading and Proof

Under the general rules governing pleading and proof, which apply in actions for damages for infringement of a ferry franchise, complainant should allege the facts showing his cause of action, such as his authority to operate the ferry and receipt of tolls, and should prove essential matters of which the court cannot take judicial notice, such as a private act establishing the ferry.

The complaint must allege facts, not conclusions of law,[83] showing plaintiff's authority to operate his ferry,[84] and to collect tolls.[85] In an action by a lessee it must be alleged that the lessor was owner of the franchise and had the right to lease it to plaintiff.[86] It is not necessary to allege ownership of the soil,[87] or to refer to the statute under which the action is brought.[88] The complaint must allege facts to show that defendant collected tolls without lawful authority, where the collection of tolls is necessary or material to the cause of action,[89] or that defendant operated the ferry other than for his personal use.[90]

Evidence. Private acts creating or establishing ferries must be proved, as the courts cannot take judicial notice of such acts.[91] Where plaintiff's ownership has been settled by a former appeal, he is not bound to show ownership at the time of the trial.[92] It is sufficient for plaintiff to show diminution in the receipts of his ferry, and the use of the prohibited ferry by the public, for the law will presume then that damage has resulted.[93]

(4) Amount of Recovery

Damages for infringement of a ferry franchise may be measured by the amount of tolls lost as a result of the infringement and any physical injury which may have been done. Where plaintiff's landings are unsafe, the damages may, it has been held, be reduced by the amount required to make them safe, in an action for infringement caused by construction of a competing bridge.

The measure of damages for the infringement of a ferry franchise is ordinarily the amount of tolls lost to the owners by diminution in the number of customers using the ferry,[94] and evidence of the income derived in former years is competent to show the extent of the losses;[95] but, where it is shown that defendant also used unwarrantable means to divert the travel from plaintiff's ferry, defendant's clear gains can be made the measure of damages.[96] To the amount of tolls lost by diminution in number of customers may also be added damages for obstruction to the landing where this occurs, the measure being the diminution in value of the landing place property caused by the obstruction.[97] In estimating damages for infringement of a ferry franchise the franchise should ordinarily be considered as permanent,[98] it not being permissible to take into consideration the possibility that the legislature may repeal the law under which plaintiff is enjoying his ferry privileges,[99] but no recovery can be had for any time during which it is not shown that plaintiff had a license.[1] A ferry franchise, made valueless by a free bridge constructed by a city across the river without participation of the county authorities on the other side, was not a divisible entity, and the owners could recover their entire damages from the city.[2] Where plaintiff's landings are not safe and convenient, his damages for injuries to his ferry franchise caused by construction and operation of a bridge may be reduced by such an amount as would be necessary to put them in such condition,[3] but they cannot be reduced on the ground that plaintiff was not the owner of the land at the landing place, but a trespasser there, defendant not being entitled to benefit from this fact.[4]

f. Penalties and Forfeitures

Under statutes the owner of a duly established ferry may become entitled to recover a penalty or to take the boat of his unauthorized competitor for infringement of his franchise, although under other statutes the penalty is not available as a remedy to the injured proprietor.

Under applicable statutory provisions the owner of an authorized and established ferry may become entitled to recovery of a penalty for infringement of his franchise,[5] and statutory remedies, as explained supra subdivision e (1) of this section, may be exclusive in character. Under other statutes the penalty is not available as a remedy for the private wrong to an established ferry.[6]

Free and toll ferries. Under some statutes the penalty may be recovered only where defendant's ferry was operated for pay; not where it was free.[7]

Forfeiture of the boat used in operating an unlicensed ferry within a prohibited distance of an authorized ferry to the proprietor of such authorized ferry has been provided for as a statutory remedy.[8] A judicial proceeding to declare the forfeiture is necessary.[9]

ty,[12] which latter transfers should be effected in compliance with statutory regulations governing the same.[13] A ferry franchise or license, however, may not be transferred by operation of law or by voluntary act in violation of statutory provisions in effect making such franchise or license a trust personal to the recipient.[14] In any case the right of the transferee to exercise the right and privileges of the franchise can be questioned only by the state, and cannot be collaterally attacked.[15]

Municipal lease. It has been held that a municipal corporation authorized to maintain a ferry, or charged with the duty of doing so, may lease it to a private individual;[16] but there is authority to the contrary.[17] Such a lessee is an independent contractor and not a public officer.[18]

b. Mode and Sufficiency of Transfer

A ferry franchise should be conveyed by deed, but a sale without a deed may pass an equitable title.

Ferry franchises can be conveyed only by deed,[19] but, where the franchise, including boat and appurtenances, is sold without a conveyance, the price paid and possession taken, an equitable title passes.[20]

c. Transfer of Ferry Rights Appurtenant to Land

Ferry rights may be so far appurtenant to riparian ownership of land as to descend with it. Where the right to a public ferry is appurtenant, a conveyance of the land, with its appurtenances, passes the ferry rights, but it is otherwise where ferry rights are independent of the land. The authorities disagree respecting the right to convey land or ferry rights separately where the latter are appurtenant to the former.

A ferry franchise may be appurtenant to the freehold so as to descend with it.[21] Where the right to a public ferry is annexed to a tract of land as appurtenant thereto, a conveyance of the land, with its appurtenances, passes the ferry;[22] but the rule is otherwise where the ferry rights are independent of the land.[23] A lease of ferries and all other property of the lessors now used "or subject to be used," for the uses and purposes of such ferries, includes land liable to be used for ferry purposes, although not already actually so used.[24] A lease of ferries to a railroad, reserving to the lessor a percentage of the gross receipts, gives to the lessor out of the receipts for through tickets including ferry and railroad transportation charges a percentage only on the gross receipts after making a reasonable allowance to the railroad for its railroad transportation charges.[25]

Separate conveyance of land and appurtenant ferry rights. Where ferry rights are appurtenant to the soil of riparian owners, a reservation of the ferry right in a grant of the fee, or a grant of the ferry right without also granting the fee, has been held valid,[26] although there is authority to the contrary.[27]

a. Termination of Franchise in General

A ferry franchise may terminate by expiration of the term for which it was granted, or by abandonment or forfeiture, or it may be revocable at the pleasure of the licensing authorities.

A ferry franchise terminates on the expiration of the term for which it is granted,[28] or may be revocable at the pleasure of designated authorities,[29] or may terminate through abandonment or forfeiture, as discussed in the following subdivisions of this section. As shown supra § 12, a franchise may be perpetual unless limited by the grant, and it may be terminated under reserved legislative power. A ferry license is not vacated, or the franchise lost, by the death of the grantee,[30] except in jurisdictions where the franchise is held to be a personal trust imposed on the grantee alone.[31]

Substitution of other facilities. Under the practice prevailing in some jurisdictions public authorities may, on a showing that the public welfare will thereby be promoted, grant permission to substitute busses for ferries on part of a route,[32] and it has been held an order permitting such a substitution should not be construed as a permission to abandon the remainder of the ferry route.[33]

b. Abandonment or Forfeiture of Franchise

A ferry franchise may be lost by abandonment or forfeiture, as in the case of prolonged nonuser or a failure to comply with conditions attached to the grant; but temporary interruptions of service or the proprietor's absence from the state are not necessarily conclusive of abandonment or forfeiture.

A ferry franchise may be lost by abandonment or surrender,[34] as by nonuser,[35] such as unreasonable delay after grant of franchise in putting the ferry into operation.[36] Failure to exercise a ferry franchise is evidence tending to show abandonment, whether such failure begins immediately after grant of the franchise[37] or during the term of the franchise;[38] but evidence of nonuser may be rebutted by showing that the ferry owners used other effective methods to serve the public during the time the ferry was not in operation,[39] or that the boat, although it was seized and sold under judicial process and temporarily discontinued during the proceedings, was put into service again by the purchaser immediately after the sale,[40] or that the operation of the boat was temporarily interrupted in consequence of the river being frozen.[41] Poor or interrupted ferry service is not necessarily proof of abandonment.[42] A grant of a franchise by two counties on opposite sides of a river is not abandoned by having the ferry rights recorded in the county court of a new county, formed by a merger of the counties originally granting the franchise.[43] Accepting a subsequent limited grant is not a waiver or surrender of a prior grant in fee,[44] and the fact that a ferry proprietor seeks a new or renewed ferry franchise does not necessarily show that he has abandoned a prior franchise.[45]

A refusal to transport may be ground for forfeiture of a ferry franchise,[46] as may circumstances

showing bad faith and a purpose to deprive the public of the benefits of the ferry.[47]

Where the owner of a ferry franchise abandons it on condition of being permitted to incorporate as a bridge company, he may not claim any additional rights under the bridge company incorporation by virtue of his former ownership of the ferry privilege.[48]

Noncompliance with conditions of grant. The franchise may be forfeited by failure to comply with the conditions on which it was granted,[49] but a subsequent recognition of the existence of the franchise by the granting authority may operate to exempt the owner from forfeiture of his franchise on that particular ground.[50]

Failure to renew the bond as required by statute is evidence of abandonment.[51]

Absence or nonresidence. Absence of a ferry licensee from the state is not per se an abandonment of the ferry rights,[52] nor, under statutes requiring residence of ferry proprietors, does his nonresidence ipso facto forfeit his franchise,[53] but due proceedings must be had to accomplish a forfeiture for nonresidence.[54] On the other hand, it has been held that a ferry franchise holder who disregards an order requiring him to sell the franchise or else to become a resident and file a bond may not thereafter complain because his franchise was forfeited.[55]

c. Proceedings for Forfeiture or Discontinuance

Proceedings for forfeiture or discontinuance of ferry franchises vary with the law of the jurisdiction and may consist in a formal proceeding for revocation or in a refusal to renew a necessary ferry license on a due showing that the public welfare so demands, or quo warranto may lie. There should be a due compliance with all procedural requirements of the governing statute, including requirements as to notice.

In states requiring a renewal of licenses at regular intervals, the licensing authority has power to discontinue a ferry franchise, by refusing a renewal of the license, when the public welfare requires it.[56] When a ferry franchise is once granted and a ferry is established thereunder, the ferry privilege continues subject to the power of the proper authorities to discontinue it when the public interest and convenience so require,[57] and if for any cause the owner of the franchise subjects his right to forfeiture the fact must be ascertained by an appropriate judicial proceeding instituted for that purpose;[58] it cannot be determined in a collateral proceeding.[59] While a county court may have power to discontinue a ferry franchise by refusing the annual license for its further exercise when the public welfare demands, there must be some foundation in fact for such discontinuance and it may not arbitrarily refuse an annual license.[60]

Jurisdiction to forfeit a ferry franchise is special, and it may be forfeited only on the grounds specified in the statute under which the proceedings are brought.[61] Acts providing for revocation of a ferry franchise when the public welfare demands it merely empower county authorities charged with such matters to revoke after petition and hearing,[62] and where no proceedings for revocation are instituted the franchise continues until the end of its term.[63] Ordinarily the state alone can insist upon the forfeiture of a ferry franchise.[64] The forfeiture dates only from the date of the judgment of ouster;[65] but proceedings for forfeiture are not necessary where the ferry franchise has been lost or discontinued by nonuser under the statute, the discontinuance being complete without judgment of ouster,[66] or where the ferry is maintained as an incident to a chartered turnpike and the turnpike franchise has been forfeited.[67]

A proceeding in the nature of quo warranto is the appropriate judicial proceeding for trying the question of forfeiture.[68] Equity has jurisdiction to cancel a lease of a municipal ferry to a private operator for nonperformance of its terms.[69] All statutory requirements as to conditions precedent to the commencement of proceedings must be observed,[70] as giving statutory notice to execute a new bond, or a sufficient bond, before instituting proceedings for forfeiture for failure to give the bond as required.[71] A private relator in proceedings for forfeiture must show some interest in himself authorizing him to prosecute the proceedings, in the absence of an order of court authorizing him to do so.[72] It is no defense to quo warranto proceedings that the owner of the franchise had given bond for the faithful performance of his duties.[73]

Notice of proceedings. Statutory provisions as to notice of proceedings to revoke a ferry franchise must be complied with.[74] Such notice is jurisdictional,[75] and the mere fact that the owner is in court on his own motion to renew his covenant is not sufficient to give the court jurisdiction.[76] It is not only indispensable that the notice be given the owner, but that the jurisdictional facts be stated in the notice.[77] The notice should inform the owner of the nature of the complaint,[78] and, where the statute under which a proceeding is brought to revoke a ferry franchise does not confer on a person uninterested in the franchise the right to institute such a proceeding, notice of the proceeding should show the movant's interest.[79] The posting and publication of notice in a statutory proceeding of this description may be equivalent to service of summons.[80] Where the county court is by statute given exclusive jurisdiction of such a proceeding, it is immaterial whether the procedure of the court or the giving of notice by the judge is sua sponte or at the suggestion of another.[81]

Remedy for "usurpation." Under statutes providing for actions to prevent usurpation of a franchise, the owner of a ferry franchise cannot become a usurper thereof until he has been deprived of his franchise in the statutory manner, and to be a usurper his claim to the franchise must be unfounded and without pretense of a franchise granted under the statute.[82] Statutes providing a remedy by action for usurpation of a franchise are not, however, exclusive of special statutory remedies and do not furnish the only method of revoking a ferry franchise.[83]

d. Renewal of Franchise

A ferry franchise is ordinarily subject to renewal, and under local regulations the original ferry operator may have an option or preference of renewal. Application for a renewal should show validity of the original franchise and the question of renewal is generally addressed to the discretion of the granting authorities.

In some states the statutes give the former owner a right to have his license renewed if he has kept the ferry according to law.[84] In other states the statutes make the former keeper of a ferry a preferred claimant for the right to a renewal when the original franchise has expired.[85] In jurisdictions where riparian owners are preferred claimants for the franchise in the first instance, they are entitled to the same preference as to a renewal.[86] The application must show validity of the original license as a foundation for its renewal.[87]

87. Or.—Dean v. Washington Nav. Co., 115 P. 284, 59 Or. 91.

The granting of a renewal is discretionary with the authorities having power to make the grant, and if they deem it for the public good they may refuse a renewal and discontinue the ferry.[88] A county court having before it two applications for the same ferry franchise may in its discretion grant the one first filed even though the other was submitted by a prior franchise holder seeking to renew, where the latter failed to make application until long after expiration of its original franchise.[89]

Validity of judgment. Where a county court is invested by statute with jurisdiction to grant a ferry franchise, but not to extend or renew one, the fact that its judgment employs inapt terms by stating that it renews a given ferry franchise will not render the judgment void, as it will be construed as a grant from the date of the expiration of the original franchise;[90] such a judgment is not open to collateral attack.[91]

Unlicensed operation not serving as renewal. Subsequent operation of the ferry without a license will not serve to restore the ferryman to his rights under a franchise which he had allowed to lapse.[92]

Renewal under lease. The assignee of a lease of a ferry franchise expending substantial sums for repairs and equipment does not acquire an equity such as to prevent expiration of the lease by neglect of the lessee to make a timely exercise of a renewal option, and the fact that one of the lessors was an employee of such assignee and failed to remind him of the necessity of a timely notice to prevent lapse of the option does not estop the lessors from insisting on such lapse; nor will the silence of such employee lessor constitute a ratification of a delayed notice given by the assignee. In this connection it has been held that the time of exercising the renewal option constitutes the essence of the contract, that, on a failure of the lease assignee to make a timely exercise of such option, forfeiture of the lease should be adjudged, especially as to a coöwner of the franchise not signing the lease, and that, as the contract of lease referred to the parties as lessee and lessor and was otherwise couched in language appropriate to a lease, it should be construed as creating a landlord and tenant relationship and not one of partnership or of joint adventure in operation of the ferry, so that the failure to exercise the option of renewal was fatal and its effect could not be avoided by arguing that the parties were partners in operation of the ferry.[93]

§ 19. Construction and Maintenance of Boats, Buildings, and Works

The rights and duties of ferry proprietors in respect of construction and maintenance of boats, buildings, and works are governed by the applicable provisions of statutes, franchises, and contracts. Under a statute permitting levy of taxes to maintain a ferry, none may be levied to build or repair one.

Under statute it has been held that a ferry operator has the duty of maintaining a roadway on the bank from high-water mark on the state highway to low-water mark.[94]

Rights of upland and shore land owners. An upland owner has a statutory right to lease abutting shore land, but such right is subservient to a ferry owner's dominant easement, and the upland owner may exercise his right and use his land only in a manner not interfering with the dominant easement of the ferry owner, and since the latter has only an easement in the upland, he is not negligent in his failure to secure a lease of abutting shore land, across which it is sought to extend the easement, before the leasing thereof by the upland owner.[95] A ferry rack constructed at the side of a pier belonging to the upland owner, pursuant to a franchise from municipal authorities, does not give rise to an action for damages resulting from interference with the pier of the upland owner, as it is neither a nuisance nor unlawful.[96]

Construction of termini and application of deposit to damages. Where a city and a ferry company enter into a contract whereby the city grants the ferry company a franchise to operate between a terminal to be constructed by the city and a place in another state, even in the absence of a specific provision to such effect, there is a clear implication that the ferry company is to construct a terminal on the other side of the water, and that both termini should be completed at substantially the same time, inability of the ferry company to carry out its part of the contract excuses the city, where it has performed substantially, from proceeding further with construction of its terminal, and under such circumstances the city may, without completing its own terminal construction, apply a deposit made by the ferry company to compensate it for damages.[97]

Taxes. Statutes authorizing the levy of taxes for "operation" of ferries cannot be upheld as levies for the building or repairing of ferries.[98]

§ 20. Injuries to Ferry Property

Actions for damages for injury to, or interference with, a ferry franchise are considered supra § 16.

§ 21. Offenses

Unlawful establishment of a ferry may constitute an offense.

Under statutes in some jurisdictions, the unlawful establishment of a ferry is made an offense.[99]

III. REGULATION AND CONTROL

§ 22. Power to Regulate and Control in General

Within limitations as to interference with interstate commerce and obstruction of navigable waters elsewhere discussed, the state has inherent power to regulate and control ferries operating within its borders, which may be exercised through the legislature or through inferior bodies, such as cities or counties. Regulation may be by law or contract.

The state has power to control travel over its navigable waters and in the exercise of such power may regulate ferries;[1] and within limitations affecting interstate or foreign commerce and the obstruction of navigable waters, as discussed in Commerce § 42 and in the C.J.S. title Navigable Waters § 44, also 45 C.J. p 471 notes 24, 25, the police power of the state extends to the regulation of ferries operating in or into the state,[2] and in the exercise thereof each state's power is confined to its own jurisdiction.[3] In other words, the right or liberty to operate a public ferry cannot be exercised without the consent of the state and is subject to the supervision and control of the state or its mandatories.[4] The power to regulate and control ferries rests primarily in the legislatures of the different states,[5] or in other bodies to whom it may be intrusted by constitutional provisions,[6] and under inherent or delegated authority may be exercised by inferior bodies,[7] such as cities,[8] counties,[9] or state

Creation of office of road supervisor

A local act creating the office of road supervisor for Chilton County and making supervisor's authority and duties subject to control of commissioners' court, did not, as respects Chilton County, repeal statute commissions or departments.[10] Public service commission laws bringing utilities within the regulatory power of a state commission or department may operate to repeal earlier laws under which such regulation was vested in other bodies, such as counties, although other features of such earlier laws not inconsistent with the public service commission statute may remain in full force and effect.[11] The courts have upheld the validity of the exercise of delegated powers to regulate ferries;[12] and when the power is delegated in terms authorizing an inferior body to regulate ferries within its jurisdiction, it is sufficient if one terminus only is within its jurisdiction.[13] Regulation need not necessarily be by ordinance or by-law; it may take the form of an agreement with the licensee.[14]

Federal statutes regulating navigation apply to ferries.[15]

§ 23. Extent of Power

The state in the exercise of its police power may make such regulations affecting ferry operation as will subserve public convenience, and in this connection may directly or through its proper agencies regulate the carrying of dangerous things, the character and frequency of service, and the moving of terminals.

The state, in the exercise of its police power, may make such rules and regulations as may be necessary to insure that a ferry franchise shall not be abused to the serious detriment or inconvenience of the public;[16] but governmental regulations of this character are subject to judicial review, as for unfair discrimination.[17] Regulations prohibiting the carrying of certain dangerous articles,[18] or the continuance of unsanitary conditions on the boats,[19] or fixing the hours during which the ferry shall be operated, and the number and frequency of trips,[20] are a valid exercise of the power. Ferries and ferrymen may be required under bond to do specific things requisite or proper in operating a ferry,[21] as, for example, to keep safe and convenient boats, with a sufficient number of ferrymen, and to pay a statutory penalty to one unreasonably detained.[22] A departmental order requiring a ferry company to move its terminal and to make other changes has been upheld as against the objection that a public giving courts of county commissioners general superintendence of roads, bridges, and ferries, or deprive the Chilton County commissioners' court of any power conferred by such statute.—Thompson v. Chilton County, 181 So. 701, 236 Ala. 142.

Discretion upheld in absence of abuse

So long as the manner of operation of a ferry acquired by a port under a comprehensive plan for port improvements does not substantially vary from the plan as submitted to the voters, the discretion of the officers will not be controlled by the courts.—Raine v. utility may not be permitted to abandon part of its service without surrendering its entire franchise, where the statute empowered the department to determine what service was necessary and whether or not any was necessary, and where, in effect, the order was not for an abandonment but rather for a substitution of a different kind of service.[23] In determining whether revenues accruing are sufficient to maintain the ferry service formerly ordered or to warrant operation of more than a certain number of boats, the department properly rejects the contention that it should consider an anticipated subsequent increase of business, and it is within the discretion of the department to decide whether or not it should consider the company's operations as a whole in determining what service the company is financially able to render over a particular route. The decision of the department as to the kind of service to be rendered is not necessarily res judicata so as to preclude relief in subsequent proceedings before the department, where this is preferable to reopening prior proceedings with a voluminous record.[24]

§ 24. —— License Fees

The state may impose a license fee or tax on the operation of ferries within its borders.

The state may, through the proper authorities, require the payment of a license fee from ferries operating within its jurisdiction.[25] A license fee or tax is payable only on the issuing of the license, and is not taxable on a riparian owner's right to a ferry franchise in advance of his acting on it.[26] An annual license fee, required by statute, becomes payable at yearly intervals, without giving notice to the licensee, in the absence of express requirement of notice.[27]

Under statutes imposing a license tax on the owner or lessee of a toll ferry, a contractor operating a ferry free to the public under agreement with the state to pay him a certain sum monthly to cover operating expenses and his own salary is not the owner or lessee of a toll ferry so as to be subject to tax.[28]

Validity of taxing acts. A statute levying a tax on the operation of a ferry within a specified distance of a state-owned toll bridge and creating a presumption that such a ferry competes with the bridge has been upheld as against a charge of arbitrary discrimination, and it has also been held that such an act is not objectionable as foreclosing the issue of competition, since the presumption created is not conclusive in character and must still be judicially determined.[29]

§ 25. —— Ferriage Rates

a. In general
b. Discrimination and reasonableness of rates
c. Compliance with established ferry tariff

a. In General

In the exercise of its police power the state, or its political subdivisions, may fix ferry rates. Such rates may be fixed either by legislation or by contract, and rates once fixed are subject to change by the public authorities.

Within limitations affecting interstate and internation ferriage, as discussed in Commerce § 95, the state, either directly or through an inferior body to which the power has been delegated, may fix the rates of ferriage,[30] even though there is no express reservation of such power in the legislative grant of the franchise.[31] Under constitutional provisions conferring exclusive original jurisdiction on county courts in matters relating to ferries, the county courts have power to fix ferriage rates, and subsequently enacted statutes purporting to confer jurisdiction on a railroad commission in all matters pertaining to regulation and operation of ferries are ineffectual to transfer jurisdiction over ferry rates from the county court to the commission;

nor does a constitutional amendment authorizing creation of a commission to correct abuses and excessive charges by railroads, canals, and turnpike companies apply to ferries so as to deprive the county court of its exclusive original jurisdiction over ferriage rates.[32] Statutes empowering police juries of parishes to establish ferries and to fix rates except as to ferries within the control of municipal corporations, contemplate that the latter ferries shall be subject to municipal control of rates not established by the ferry franchise, and the right of a municipality to fix ferry rates arises from the police power and may be exercised either by contract with the grantee or by appropriate legislation.[33] The power to regulate fares charged at a terminus within the state exists over corporations, even though incorporated under, and claiming the protection of, the laws of the state on the opposite side of the river;[34] but a statute authorizing a municipality to fix rates on a ferry operating between it and a point within another state has been construed as empowering the municipality to fix rates only from its landing to that in the other state and not to fix the return rate from the point of departure in such other state.[35]

Fixing rates on establishment of ferry. Under the statutes in some states, rates must be fixed at the same time the ferry is established,[36] but, under statutes so providing without further restrictions on the power, it is not necessary that the rates be fixed in the same order as that establishing the ferry.[37]

Subsidies. Where a county contracts to pay a ferry proprietor subsidies for operating the ferry, and subsequently it is determined that such contract is invalid and the county is permitted to recover the sums paid as subsidies, the ferry company should be allowed to recover the reasonable value of services rendered, as measured by the invalid contract and not by maximum ferry license fees.[38]

Hearing. No notice or hearing is necessary to the exercise of the legislative power to fix ferry rates, and it is sufficient if persons affected are afforded a hearing when it is attempted to execute the provisions adopted by legislation.[39]

Posting rates. Some statutes require the ferryman to post the rates for transportation on the boat or in some conspicuous place in the approaches or entrance to the ferry, and impose a penalty for failure so to do.[40] Under other statutes the failure to post the rates results in a forfeiture of the right to collect tolls,[41] but under a statute so providing, failure to post rates of toll does not deprive the ferryman of his right to collect tolls where the passenger knows the rates, does not object to them, and accepts the service under these circumstances.[42] Such statutes have no application to ferries operating under a foreign charter in the absence of a definite and plainly expressed statutory provision requiring it.[43]

Change of rates. Rates, once established, may be reduced on giving notice, as required by statute, to the owner of the ferry, which notice must comply with a statutory requirement that it contain a statement of the proposed reduction. The judgment of the court cannot go beyond the reduction proposed in the notice.[44] Rates once fixed in a judicial proceeding cannot be relitigated in another similar proceeding without showing a substantial change in conditions.[45]

Contracts between a ferry company and a municipality as to rates are subject to the reserved or police power of the state and it may give jurisdiction to a state department to change rates in alteration of the provisions of such contracts.[46]

b. Discrimination and Reasonableness of Rates

Ferry rates fixed should be reasonable and nondiscriminatory, and the issue of reasonableness is addressed in the first instance to the commission or other rate-making body although subject to judicial review.

Ferry rates fixed by public authorities must be fair and reasonable,[47] and to be so must allow a fair return on the value of the property employed in the public service,[48] valued as of the time of the inquiry,[49] after setting aside a proper sum for depreciation and replacement,[50] and after consideration of such factors as the state of the evidence may warrant under the law as applied to the circumstances disclosed.[51] The fact that a ferry was entirely paid for out of excessive profits realized from high rates in the past is immaterial in fixing rates for the future.[52] The reasonableness of the rate is ultimately a question for the court,[53] and the order of the inferior body is, therefore, always subject to review by the court.[54] However, a court ordinarily has no jurisdiction over the fixing of rates in the first instance, even though the case is before it on another point,[55] and if the rate fixed is not unreasonable, the court cannot interfere,[56] and judicial interference is permissible only where the rate fixing body acted arbitrarily or on a fundamentally erroneous basis.[57] There is a presumption that the rate fixed by the ferry authorities is reasonable, and the burden is on complainant to show the contrary.[58]

c. Compliance with Established Ferry Tariff

Rates charged by a ferry proprietor should comply with established tariffs, and contracts varying rates from such tariffs are invalid.

A tariff for ferriage duly established is valid and effective unless and until modified, and may not be evaded by agreement between the ferry carrier and its patrons, as by a contract discriminating in favor of a particular shipper, such a contract not being sustainable on the plea that it benefits both ferry company and shipper.[59] Where a ferry tariff filed with the proper authorities in compliance with governing provisions of law is in terms applicable to "touring autobusses or stages," it will be construed as applying to stages having a regular schedule as well as to those of irregular or no schedule, and since the tariff conveys such meaning, the fact that the ferry company may have had an intent to limit the tariff to irregular or occasional busses is not controlling.[60] The fact that a contracting bus company is also a connecting carrier with the ferry company does not change the shipper-carrier relationship of the ferry company and bus company, so as to take their contract out of the rule against discrimination under established tariffs and permit application of contract rates instead of tariff rates.[61] However, a judgment reversing a departmental order enforcing special contract rates and requiring compliance with the established tariff in such a case does not preclude subsequent establishment of a new tariff which would apply generally and without discrimination.[62] Where governing law expressly permits issuance of commutation tickets at special rates, such exception has been construed as permitting a ferry to issue commutation tickets for vehicles and freight as well as passengers.[63] Jurisdiction over a proceeding to recover the difference between ferry rates paid and rates established by tariff is not, it has been held, vested exclusively in a department of public works.[64]

IV. OPERATION

§ 26. Duties and Liabilities of Ferrymen

In fulfillment of his primary duty to operate and transport, a ferryman should provide adequate boats and means of ingress and egress to and from the same.

In connection with his primary duty to operate and transport, as discussed infra § 27, and in fulfillment of his general obligations, a ferry proprietor is under a duty to provide adequate and suitable boats,[65] and to use due care to keep the boats in good repair and running order,[66] and is bound to furnish adequate means of ingress and egress to and from the ferryboat.[67] From the latter duty springs the right of ferry patrons to travel safely, by all appropriate means of travel, to and from the ferry over a terminal tract provided by the proprietor.[68] Where the ferry proprietor does not assume to furnish adequate means of conveyance to and from the ferry, it may not exclude local carriers from entering its terminal grounds to discharge passengers at the ferry.[69] A ferry company may not,

Regulation by public authorities

Where a public service railway company, having been granted a right of way across the property of a railroad company to a ferry, attempted to fence off such right of way, thereby excluding jitney competition, the township could resist erection of a fence as a police measure, the plaza through which the right of way extended, although not dedicated, being nevertheless affected with a public interest.—Public Service Ry. consistently with its public duty, exclude all busses from the ferry grounds while admitting all other public and private conveyances, even though use of the busses unduly congests the ferry terminal grounds and the bus operators are unprotected by contractual rights.[70] The duty referred to does not, however, include a requirement that the ferry proprietor furnish taxicab owners a place on the terminal tract on which to solicit business,[71] and so long as adequate facilities, such as means of ingress and egress, are furnished to ferry patrons, the proprietor may use, or permit others to use, the terminal tract for any lawful purpose,[72] and in this connection may grant one taxicab company an exclusive right to solicit business on ferry grounds which the courts will protect by restraining a rival taxicab company from interfering therewith.[73]

Operation in compliance with statutory provisions. Where a municipality is authorized by the state to acquire and operate a ferry, it must regulate and operate it in compliance with the governing statutory or charter provisions.[74]

§ 27. —— Duty to Operate and Transport

a. Duty to operate
b. Duty to transport

a. Duty to Operate

The holder of a ferry franchise is ordinarily under a duty to operate the ferry, but in the absence of statutory prohibition may delegate such duty to another or may in a proper case discontinue operation.

The acceptance of a ferry franchise imposes on the grantee the duty of operating the ferry,[75] which duty is, of course, limited to the extent to which the grantee has lawful right and power to operate.[76] A railroad receiving legislative authority to operate a ferry as an extension and part of its rail line is under a duty to do so.[77]

Delegation of duty. Within limitations imposed by governing statutes, it is permissible to delegate the duty of operating a ferry.[78]

Waiver of, or relief from, duty of operation. The duty of operation is an obligation to the state which can be waived only by the state, and such waiver will not be presumed without the use of language in some statute clearly expressing or implying it. It will not be inferred from the omission of officers of the state to take steps for enforcing the duty.[79]

In the absence of mandatory requirement of statute, a public corporation may discontinue operation of a ferry where, in the sound discretion of its officials, such discontinuance is advisable.[80]

b. Duty to Transport

The operator of a public ferry is under a duty to transport passengers at reasonable hours, and failure to fulfill his duty in such respect may subject him to damages or penalty. A private ferryman ordinarily has no duty of transportation.

70. N.J.—Philadelphia & Camden Ferry Co. v. Johnson, supra.

Public duty paramount

A ferry company's duty to the public is first and paramount, and qualifies the right to control its own property and adopt and execute regulative measures, such as exclusion of all motor busses from its terminal grounds.—Philadelphia & Camden Ferry Co. v. Johnson, supra.

Occasional abuse of bus privileges

That, in individual cases, inconsiderate bus drivers have caused more or less delay at ferry terminal by failing to move on after discharging passengers, and by waiting for outgoing passengers, does not entitle ferry company to injunction wholly excluding all busses from the terminal grounds.—Philadelphia & Camden Ferry Co. v. Johnson, supra.

Exclusion by grantee of right of way

Where a railroad company granted a right of way to a public service railway company to operate street cars across a plaza giving access to the railroad company's ferries, the public service company could not fence its right of way as a regulation of the plaza in the right of the railroad company, which, while having a right reasonably to regulate the plaza, could not exclude local carriers awaiting passengers from the ferry, it appearing that the fence would have such effect.—Public Service Ry. Co. v. Weehawken Tp., 119 A. 90, 94 N.J.Eq. 88.

Delegation under power to lease

The patrons of a ferry which had been acquired by a port as part of a comprehensive plan of port improvement adopted by the voters of the port cannot complain that the port, which was expressly given power to lease the ferry, had delegated its power to operate the ferry to a county which was authorized by law to operate and control it, even though the sale of the ferry by the port to the county was forbidden by statute.—Raine v. Port of Seattle, supra.

80. Wash.—Woody v. Port of Seattle, 203 P. 59, 118 Wash. 163.

Other means of transportation becoming available

A port which, in accordance with the vote of the people adopting a comprehensive plan of improvement, had acquired a ferry previously operated by a private corporation, is not required to continue its operation at a constant loss, which could only be made good by taxation, where since the acquisition of the ferry street car lines and paved roads had been constructed which furnished necessary transportation to the community served by the ferry.—Woody v. Port of Seattle, supra.

It is the duty of a public ferryman to transport passengers at all reasonable hours and without unnecessary delay,[81] and any person who is refused transportation or unreasonably delayed may maintain an action for the damages sustained.[82] Under the statutes in some states a penalty may be recovered in such cases by the injured party, as shown infra § 32, which remedy has been held to be cumulative, and no bar to an action on the case for damages.[83] In cases of refusal to transport across boundary waters between states, the statutory remedy can be invoked only where the refusal was to transport from the state where the statute is operative.[84] No duty of transportation rests on a private ferry.[85]

§ 28. —— Liability for Injuries Generally

a. In general
b. Ferryman as common carrier
c. Care as to passengers and goods generally
d. Safe and seaworthy vessel
e. Equipment and appliances
f. Landings and approaches
g. Contributory negligence
h. Property in owner's custody
i. Liability of private and unlicensed ferrymen
j. Liability of lessor and lessee
k. Liability of municipal corporation

a. In General

A ferryman owes the general public a duty to exercise reasonable diligence to prevent casualties reasonably to be anticipated, but does not owe either a trespasser or a member of the general public the same degree of care that he owes passengers.

A licensed ferryman owes the general public a duty to take all reasonable precautions to prevent casualties which may reasonably be anticipated and which the exercise of ordinary prudence and foresight on his part would prevent.[86] A public ferryman is ordinarily regarded as a common carrier of passengers and property intrusted to his care and held accountable for the exercise of due diligence in respect of their safety, as shown in following subdivisions of this section; but neither under common-law principles nor under statutes merely declaratory of the common law does he owe the carrier's duty of care to one not sustaining toward him the relationship of passenger, and a ferryman may not be held accountable for the injury or death of one not a passenger which occurs without breach of the ferryman's duty toward the general public.[87]

A trespasser is not entitled to the same degree of care on the part of the ferryman as is due to passengers, and those rightfully on the premises.[88]

Gratuitous service. Where a ferryman carries property gratuitously, he has been held liable for gross negligence only.[89]

Motorist mistaking moored ferryboat for bridge

Where plaintiff's decedent was drowned by driving off end of ferryboat, which was moored to shore at night, in belief that it was a bridge, the failure of owner to guard against such casualty was not negligence, it not being a contingency which could have been reasonably anticipated.—Harris v. McClintock, supra.

Persons not invitees

Where highway approaching river afforded extensive view of stream in daytime, and private road leading from highway to river had never been and could not be used except to reach ferry, automobile driver and occupants of car who lost their way and, without any purpose of using ferry, drove along private road to ferry landing and into river, were not invitees for whose death owner of private road and ferry was liable, since his only acquiescence in use of road by public was for access to ferry. In this connection the court stated that it had been ruled that the motorist was not a trespasser, and remarked that its decision was limited to ruling that it was error to submit the law as to invitees, and that the question whether defendant might be liable for some breach of duty to the general public was left undecided.—Printy v. Reimbold, 205 N.W. 211, 200 Iowa 541, 41 A.L.R. 1423, overruling 202 N.W. 122, 200 Iowa 541, 41 A.L.R. 1423.

Runaway horse

The failure to keep up the barriers on the boat while the boat is moored to the bank does not render the ferry owner liable for the loss of a runaway horse, passing over the boat into the water.—Evans v. Goodrich, 49 N.W. 188, 46 Minn. 388.

Statutes relating to ferryman's duty to his passengers are inapplicable to his duties to the general public, and recovery may not be had for the death or injury of one not a passenger under such statute, recovery, if any, being imposed on common-law grounds.—Harris v. McClintock, 261 S.W. 29, 164 Ark. 145.

Services compensated for by county

Where the consideration for the operation of a public ferry was paid by the county for the benefit of the citizens, the services of the ferryman were not gratuitous, so as to make him liable only for the consequences of gross negligence.—Hil-ferryboat in a fog is not negligence per se as regards the liability of the ferryman for injury to persons and property generally,[90] and, as shown in Collision § 114, ferryboats are exempt from the usual duty to discontinue navigation during fogs.

b. Ferryman as Common Carrier

A public ferryman is ordinarily regarded as a common carrier of passengers and property committed to his care. A private ferryman is not a common carrier.

A public ferryman is a common carrier of passengers.[91] As soon as a ferryman signifies his assent or readiness to receive the passenger, he becomes liable for his safe transit and delivery.[92] The duty to protect the passenger as a passenger continues until he has been landed.[93]

Of property. A public ferryman is generally regarded as a common carrier of property,[94] although some decisions limit the application of this doctrine and hold that while a ferryman is a common carrier in the sense that he cannot refuse transportation of goods to any person applying therefor, he does not assume the obligation of a common carrier with reference to the transportation of goods, but is liable only in case of neglect or fault on his part.[95] As in the case of transportation of passengers, liability attaches as soon as there is assent to receive the goods for transportation.[96]

c. Care as to Passengers and Goods Generally

A public ferryman must exercise the care required of a common carrier as to passengers and according to the generally accepted rule as to property which he transports.

The status of a public ferryman as a common carrier, as discussed in the preceding subdivision of this section, has led the courts to impose on him an insurer's liability for property committed to his care, making him responsible for all damage except that resulting from an act of God or the public enemy,[98] although, as therein shown some authorities refuse to hold him to so great a degree of liability. In accordance with principles discussed in Carriers §§ 676–712, a ferryman, although a common carrier of passengers, is not an insurer of their safety,[99] but is held to exercise of the highest degree of care and foresight in the protection of their lives and persons.[1] A ferryman who fails in his duty to exercise due care in respect of either passengers or property will be held responsible for resultant damage,[2] although he will be relieved of responsibility where he has not failed in such duty.[3] Negligence

3. La.—Johnson v. Bisso Ferry Co., 127 So. 661, 13 La.App. 159.

Injury to passenger by automobile
La.—Johnson v. Bisso Ferry Co., supra.

Last clear chance doctrine
Where there was no proof that any one connected with train movements saw passenger on rails of fer-

in operation may consist of a number of concurring elements, no one of which in itself is sufficient to establish actionable negligence.[4] It is not necessary that the ferryman should have had notice that a failure to take certain precautions would result in accident, if the possibility of its happening was clear to the ordinarily prudent mind,[5] and he is chargeable with knowledge that automobiles may not be, at all times, under adequate control,[6] although the ferryman is under no duty to inspect each car or as it comes aboard to ascertain whether its brakes and other machinery are in good working order.[7] Where the accident is an extraordinary one that could not reasonably have been anticipated as resulting from the ferryman's alleged negligent act, the ferryman is not liable.[8] Where it is sought to hold a ferryman for negligence of his employees, there must be proof that the negligent act was the act of an employee,[9] and that the employee's act was within the course and scope of his employment.[10]

Animals. A ferryman may, as in the case of damage to other property, be held responsible for damage to animals resulting from his negligence[11] and is chargeable with knowledge that animals are easily frightened;[12] but he is not chargeable for loss or injury due to the animal's own restive or vicious character.[13] The act of swimming cattle across a river is no part of a ferryman's legal duty and he cannot be held liable for its nonperformance.[14]

Expulsion of passenger. A ferryman has no right to expel a passenger from a ferryboat for violating a rule of the company without first informing the passenger of the existence of the rule, nor has he any right to touch the person of the passenger without first notifying him that unless he leaves the boat such extreme measures will be resorted to.[15] However, the use of only sufficient force to compel a passenger to alight at destination as required by the rules of the ferry is not actionable.[16]

d. Safe and Seaworthy Vessel

The ferryman should furnish a seaworthy boat, properly manned and equipped, and maintain it in a safe condition; but he is not obligated to guard against extraordinary accidents not reasonably to be anticipated and fulfills his duty by adopting methods of construction followed by others and found by experience to be efficient and safe.

As a common carrier of passengers, under the rule discussed supra subdivision b of this section, a ferryman owes his passengers a duty to exercise due care to provide a reasonably safe vessel,[17] and ryboat used to transport trains across river when train could or should have been stopped in time to avoid killing him, last clear chance doctrine did not apply.—Dowling v. Texas Pacific-Missouri Pac. Terminal R. Co., La.App., 154 So. 65.

Duty to use highest degree of care in furnishing vessel

A common carrier, such as a ferryboat, is bound to use the highest degree of care in furnishing a safe con-his duty in such respect is absolute[18] and nondelegable.[19] The ferryman must furnish a seaworthy ferryboat,[20] manned and equipped for all normal purposes,[21] and keep it in a safe condition, free from anything likely to cause injury to passengers or their property.[22] However, the ferryman fulfills his duty in construction of ferryboats by adopting methods in general use which have been found efficient and safe,[23] and mere failure to provide sufficient seats for all passengers that a boat can safely carry is not of itself proof of negligence.[24] He is not required to put himself to unreasonable expense and trouble to guard against all possible accident,[25] nor, on the other hand, is it necessary that he should have had notice of the particular method in which an accident would occur, if the possibility of an accident was clear to the ordinarily prudent eye.[26] The application of these rules is limited to cases where the loss or injury arises in the operation of the ferry and to one entitled to its service.[27]

e. Equipment and Appliances

A ferryman is under a duty to provide his boat with such equipment as is necessary for the safe transportation of passengers and property, but need not furnish appliances of a character to safeguard against casualties not reasonably to be anticipated.

A ferryman must equip his boat with such appliances as are necessary to secure the safety of passengers and property in transportation,[28] such as barriers[29] and mooring appliances,[30] and the sufficiency of the equipment and its installation will be measured by the high standard of care imposed on a common carrier.[31] It is not necessary that the ferryman should have had notice that his failure to provide safeguards would result in accident, if the possibility of accident should have been foreseen.[32] However, the ferryman need not equip his boat so as to prevent abnormal casualties of a character not reasonably to be anticipated,[33] and negligence cannot be predicated, on the use of the means afforded passengers to land, where such means have been in common use for many years, and have nev-veyance.—Wood v. Washington Nav. Co., 95 P.2d 1019, 1 Wash.2d 324.

Concrete duty
Ferry operator owes abstract duty to provide proper safeguards to prevent automobiles from going overboard, which becomes concrete duty on emergency arising.—Chesapeake Ferry Co. v. Cummings, supra.

Contrary custom
A ferryman is not excused for failure to provide adequate barriers by the fact that it was customary to operate boats on that river without gates or chains, it not being enough that his and other ferries may have carried animals safely without these protective measures.—Bean v. Hinson, Tex.Civ.App., 235 S.W. 327.

Mere conjecture that barriers would not have prevented the accident cannot excuse the ferryman for failure to provide such barriers.—Shepard v. Reed, C.C.A.Tenn., 26 F. 2d 19.

Manufacture of chain
Where ferry chain used to moor boat to dock broke when heavy truck was being driven off ferry, resulting in death of occupants, owner was held negligent in equipping ferry with a chain defectively welded by local blacksmith instead of with a factory-made chain.—Henson v. er been found to be dangerous or ineffective.[34] Statutory requirements in some states as to the equipment of boats, and regulations passed by properly authorized boards or commissions, will affect the issue whether or not sufficient care in this respect has been used in a particular case,[35] but it has been held that an order of court pursuant to such statutes, excusing the keeper of a ferry from having certain appliances on his boat, does not release him from any part of his liability at common law.[36] Where the duly authorized board makes no requirement as to particular appliances, that fact gives rise to a presumption which is entitled to some weight in determining the question of legal duty.[37]

f. Landings and Approaches

A ferryman should provide safe landing places and approaches to the ferryboat, but need not guard against accidents not reasonably foreseeable, and may not be made to respond in damages for casualties occurring off his premises and in the public highway.

In compliance with his duty to maintain adequate means of ingress and egress from and to the ferryboat, discussed supra § 26, a ferryman should maintain safe and suitable landings and approaches,[38] and his liability for maintenance of an unsafe landing place attaches, even though the ownership of the landing is in another.[39] The duty to remedy obvious dangers is not less stringent because of the fact that a large number of persons pass over the ferry without injury.[40] The duty as to the safety of landings applies not only to the immediate means of getting on and off the boat, but also requires the ferryman to furnish safe passageways between the ferryhouses and the streets,[41] and the common carrier's duty to provide safe means of passage between the streets and the carrier's means of transportation applies to the ferryman.[42] Passageways habitually used by foot passengers, although designed for vehicles, must be kept in reasonably safe condition for foot passengers.[43] The ferryman's liability will not, however, be so far extended as to make him responsible for injuries occurring off his premises and on the public highway.[44]

There is no duty to guard against all possible accidents which could not reasonably have been foreseen;[45] but the ferryman is under a duty to anticipate and guard against reasonably foreseeable accidents,[46] and the extraordinary character of the accident does not relieve him from liability, if it was in fact caused by his negligent act.[47] He is not bound to adopt new and improved methods, where those already in use are reasonably safe.[48] Where he does adopt the best appliances known, he will not be responsible for an injury resulting from a condition impossible to remedy,[49] but the evidence must affirmatively show that the condition is such as to be impossible to remedy.[50]

g. Contributory Negligence

Contributory negligence of a ferry user may bar his recovery. The ferryman's rules and existing customs are relevant to the issue of contributory negligence although not necessarily controlling.

A passenger may assume that the ferryman has performed his full duty toward him in the maintenance and operation of the boat, in the absence of circumstances putting him on guard,[51] and if he conducts himself as a reasonably prudent man would under the circumstances, he will not be held guilty of contributory negligence.[52] However, if, acting on the assumption of the ferryman's full performance of his obligations, the passenger still conducts himself without a reasonable degree of care under the circumstances, and if his negligence contributes to his injury, he cannot recover against the ferryman.[53] Nonperformance of a ferryman's obligation to the passenger does not relieve the passenger from the duty of exercising proper care, under circumstances showing the passenger's knowledge of existing conditions.[54]

Boarding or leaving boat. A passenger may be denied recovery for injuries sustained while boarding or leaving a ferryboat where they were caused by his contributory negligence,[55] as where he attempted to board a ferryboat after it left its moorings,[56] or failed, without excuse for doing so, to look where he was walking in passing between the dock and ferryboat.[57] Where a landing place is sufficiently safe for persons of ordinary prudence, and the passenger is injured by failure to exercise such prudence, he cannot recover.[58]

On the other hand, a passenger injured while boarding or leaving a ferryboat may recover for negligence of the ferry proprietor where the plea of contributory negligence is not sustained under the facts.[59] A passenger is justified in assuming that when the guard chains are taken down, or the gates opened for passengers to leave, the boat will remain securely fastened.[60] He may also assume that the landing place is in a safe condition,[61] and when following immediately behind other passengers need not examine particularly to see if there is a vacant place between the bridge and the boat.[62] A driver of a wagon may rely on the skill of a ferryman who directs his movements, even though he knows that the ferry is not fastened.[63] It is not negligent for the owner of a young horse to take it on a ferryboat, even though it is timid and easily frightened,[64] nor for a truck driver to stand upright on his truck while it is being driven onto a ferryboat,[65] nor for a driver to start his horse and wagon up a steep drop following a heavy team when he sees a deck hand standing there whose duty it is to block teams going up the drop.[66] The existence of customary methods in boarding or leaving a ferryboat at a particular place has a bearing on the legal character of the act, whether negligent or otherwise.[67] It has been held not negligent for a passenger to step over the guard chain and pass to the wharf before the boat is secured, even though contrary to the rules of the ferry company, it being in evidence that it was customary for passengers to leave the boat in that way,[68] or for a pas-

Operation under dangerous conditions

Where plaintiff's decedent was inexperienced in the matter of boats and was assured by the operator of a small launch used as a ferry that it was safe to undertake the trip despite adverse weather conditions, and where the boat sank owing to rough water and plaintiff's decedent was drowned, recovery could be had as against the defense of contributory negligence, since plaintiff's decedent was justified in relying on the assurances of the ferry operator that it was safe to undertake the trip under prevailing conditions.—Flanagan v. senger to leave by the carriageway, when it is in evidence that it was customary for pedestrians to use the carriageway.[69] It has been said, however, that a person who is in a place not intended for passengers is under the duty of exercising a greater degree of care than would be required if occupying a place intended for passengers,[70] and it has been held that one using the vehicular gangway in boarding or leaving the ferry assumes the risk of resultant injury[71] and is guilty of contributory negligence.[72]

Conduct in transit. A plaintiff sustaining damage on a ferryboat during the course of transit may not recover where the injury resulted from his own contributory negligence.[73] It is negligent for a driver of a team not to remain in a position where he can control his horses,[74] or to refuse to unhitch horses from his wagon when requested to do so by the ferryman.[75]

On the other hand, plaintiff is not precluded from recovery sustained as a result of defendant ferryman's breach of duty where the plea of contributory negligence is not sustained by the facts adduced in evidence.[76] It is not, as a matter of law, contributory negligence for a passenger to leave the cabin and stand on the deck between the cabin and the end of the boat,[77] or to stand near a stairway, or go down a stairway without taking hold of the railing,[78] or to rise from his seat before the boat is safely moored,[79] nor can the movements of a person in an endeavor to regain his feet be held an act of negligence on his part.[80]

Where plaintiff's violation of a criminal statute does not contribute to his injury sustained while in transit on a ferryboat, such violation does not preclude his recovery of damages from the ferryman.[81]

Effect of rules and regulations. Reasonable rules and orders of the ferryman,[82] when brought to the notice of the passenger,[83] should be considered when determining the issue of contributory negligence. The ferryman's acquiescence in customs violating his rules is evidence of their abrogation.[84]

Proximate cause. To constitute a defense available to the ferry operator the negligence of the ferry user must have contributed proximately to the damage sustained, and the defense is unavailable where the negligence of defendant was the sole proximate cause of the damage.[85]

Operation without barriers
(1) In a case where, but for the owner's effort to make his mules pull the hind wheels of his wagon back on the ferryboat without the ferryboat being fastened to the bank, the wagon would not have dragged the mules into the water and drowned them, but the accident could also have been avoided had the ferryman equipped his boat with end gates, stay chains, bumpers, or other means of preventing animals being transported from backing off the boat, it was held that defendant's negligence in operating his boat without such means for preventing accidents was

h. Property in Owner's Custody

Some authorities hold a ferryman to an insurer's liability for property remaining in the custody and control of the ferry user, while other authorities limit his liability to liability for negligence.

There is a diversity of opinion as to the liability of a ferryman for property which a passenger takes with him on a ferryboat for transportation and does not deliver into the custody of the ferryman, but retains under his own control and management.[86] It has been held that in such a case the owner acts, in the control of his property, solely as the agent of the ferryman, whose responsibility is that of a common carrier insuring the safety of the property against all loss, except such as may result from the act of God or the public enemy,[87] and, with the further exception, not occurring generally in transportation by a common carrier, that the ferryman will not be liable for loss resulting from negligence on the part of the owner in control of the property.[88] On the other hand, it has been held that, where the passenger retains the custody of his property, the ferryman is not liable as a common carrier, but only for loss or injury resulting directly from his failure to provide safe and suitable boats and appliances, or his failure to exercise proper care and skill in managing them.[89] The passenger who retains control of his property must use due care to protect it from injury, and if his own negligence in this regard contributes to the injury, he cannot recover;[90] but in such cases the ferryman will still be liable if it is shown that the loss or injury is the direct result of his omission to use due care to avoid it after becoming aware of the owner's negligence.[91] In order to exempt the ferryman from liability as a common carrier, it must appear affirmatively that the passenger retained the custody and control of his property;[92] but where the facts show simply that a passenger purchased a ferry ticket and drove his car onto the ferry, there is neither actual nor constructive delivery of the car to the ferryman so as to charge him with an insurer's liability.[93]

i. Liability of Private and Unlicensed Ferrymen

A private ferryman cannot be held to the standard of responsibility imposed on a public ferryman as a common carrier, but may be liable for negligence. One in effect holding himself out as a public ferryman may be held responsible as though he were a common carrier and cannot evade liability on the plea that he was unlicensed.

One who keeps a private ferry for his own use is not liable as a common carrier, although others are carried,[94] but is liable only for negligence,[95] and, in accordance with the general rule stated supra § 28, only for gross negligence where no toll is taken.[96] However, where the owner of a private ferry undertakes for hire to convey all persons indifferently with their carriages and goods, he subjects himself thereby to the liability of a common carrier.[97]

Liability of unlicensed ferryman. One who without authority operates a public ferry and holds himself out as a public ferryman is liable as such, and cannot take advantage of his own wrong to avoid the responsibilities of his calling.[98]

j. Liability of Lessor and Lessee

Where a ferry is leased to another, lessee or lessor may be liable for damages sustained by ferry users during operation, the liability of the lessor being dependent the direct cause of the accident, for which he was liable.—Bean v. Hinson, Tex.Civ.App., 235 S.W. 327.

(2) Ferry operator's negligence in failing to provide or use proper barriers and appliances was held sole proximate cause of death of plaintiff's intestate when automobile was driven overboard, as against contention that plaintiff's intestate was contributorily negligent in not timely stopping car.—Chesapeake Ferry Co. v. on his power to lease and the extent to which he has retained control.

Where the owner of a ferry franchise,[99] or of a ferryboat,[1] under a power to lease and in valid exercise of that power, leases it to another who has the control and management of it, it has been held that the lessee and not the owner is liable for any loss or injury caused by the defective condition of the ferry, or negligence in its management, except as to matters as to which the lessor has retained control.[2] The lessee of a common carrier ferryman himself acquires the status of a common carrier,[3] and even though the terms of the lease oblige the lessor to maintain the approaches to the ferry, this does not relieve the lessee of its obligation to provide safe means of access to its invitees, and it may be held liable as between it and a prospective passenger for injuries sustained as a result of defects in the approaches.[4] If the lease of the ferry privilege is unauthorized, the lessor is not relieved from liability for injuries occurring while the ferry is being operated by the lessee.[5] Where the lessor is primarily liable to the injured party, a lessee operating the ferry is bound to indemnify the lessor against damages caused by the lessee's negligence.[6] A person employed to operate a ferry on shares, although in exclusive control, is a servant for hire and not a lessee, and in such case the owner is liable for injuries due to negligence in its operation.[7] Under statutes in some states a landowner who leases his land on which a public ferry is situated will be held liable for its negligent use by his tenant, unless he is able to show that he has done all in his power to prevent the ferry from being used as a public ferry.[8]

k. Liability of Municipal Corporation

The general rule, subject to statutory modifications, is that a municipality is liable for damages to a ferry user caused by negligent operation or maintenance where it operates a toll ferry in its proprietary capacity, but not where it operates a free ferry in its governmental capacity.

Except as the rule may be varied by statute, a municipality operating a free ferry is deemed to be exercising a governmental function and cannot be held to respond in damages for an injury occasioned by its servants or agents;[9] but a municipality proceeding under due legal authorization and carrying for hire may be held liable for damage or injury caused a ferry user just as any other common carrier,[10] even though the business as managed was not profitable to the municipality.[11] In other words, where the municipality operates a ferry in its proprietary capacity, it is liable for damages the same as any individual or corporation.[12] Where the agents of a municipality operate a ferry without

Approaches
Under a lease providing that the lessee should maintain the ferry slips, aprons of the ferry docks, ticket offices, waiting rooms, and other structures thereon used by the lessee in its operations, and that the lessor county should maintain the remaining portions of the docks, the latter was under a duty to maintain the approaches to the ferry and liable to a prospective passenger injured by a defective plank in such an approach.—Norton v. Aerial ferry
A county which maintained a ferry for use of general public in crossing river and in winter season provided a basket or aerial carrier operated on a cable was engaged in a "proprietary" function and was liable for injuries sustained by prospective passenger as result of collapse of tower which sustained the cable.—Jacoby v. Chouteau County, 112 P.2d 1068, 112 Mont. 70.

Ferry approaches
(1) County's ferry landing approach forming continuous way from street to county's ferry was held not part of highway or street which county would have been maintaining as a part of its governmental functions, but a ferry approach as to which the county occupied a proprietary status rendering it liable for authority to do so, the municipality may not be held liable for damage occurring in the course of such unauthorized operation.[13] Where a city operates a ferry, its duty as a common carrier of passengers with reference to the care required to keep boats in a safe condition is greater than the duty of care required of it to keep its highways free from defects.[14] Statutes providing for the recovery from municipal corporations of damages caused by defects in a highway, causeway, or bridge do not authorize the recovery of damages for injuries resulting from the negligent operation of ferries.[15]

§ 29. —— Liability on Statutory Bond

A ferry user may recover against the sureties on a ferryman's bond in an otherwise proper case where the nature of the bond and governing statute is such that the bond was designed for protection of ferry users, but not where the terms of the bond limit it to other purposes, such as that of indemnity of a county against loss arising from operation of its ferry by another.

Where a ferryman's statutory bond for the faithful performance of his duties is designed for their protection, ferry users may sue thereon for damages sustained as a result of the ferryman's breach.[16] Where, however, the bond is executed merely to indemnify a county against loss, it will not be construed as an obligation of the surety to pay damages directly to ferry users for injury sustained as a result of the fault of the ferry operator acting under authority from the county.[17]

The liability of the sureties is ordinarily measured by the bond given,[18] and statutory requirements regarding a covenant to be given by a ferry owner or lessee cannot be read into a bond from which they have been omitted.[19] If the conditions of the bond enlarge the liability beyond the statutory limit, it will be void to that extent.[20] Liability beyond the statutory limit can only be enforced against the ferryman as a common carrier.[21]

§ 30. Actions to Enforce Liability

a. In general
b. Pleading
c. Evidence
d. Trial
e. Damages

a. In General

Concurrent jurisdiction of suits involving ferries plying between two different political subdivisions may be granted the courts of such subdivisions. Suits against a ferryman for damage to, or loss of, property may be brought in contract on tort.

Under a statute providing that, on streams that divide parishes, the parishes between which ferryboats ply shall have concurrent jurisdiction and that complaints for neglect or infraction of the charter shall be cognizable by the court of either parish, a suit to set aside a franchise granted by the court of one parish may be brought in the court of another parish where the ferry plies between points within the two parishes.[22]

Where property is lost or damaged by the negligence of the ferryman, the owner may sue either on the ferryman's contract as a carrier or in tort.[23]

b. Pleading

In a suit against a ferryman for injury or damage to person or property, the plaintiff's initial pleading should allege facts sufficient to show a cause of action, as by showing that the damage arose from breach of a duty imposed on the ferryman, and the defendant's plea or answer should sufficiently aver matters constituting a valid defense. An amendment may not introduce a new cause of action.

ryman for personal injury or property damage must state facts constituting a cause of action,[24] and show a breach of duty by defendant ferryman.[25] Although allegations of defendant's negligence are usual, they may be unnecessary where defendant is liable as a common carrier,[26] but where negligence is necessary to fix defendant with liability, it must be alleged.[27] The complaint in an action for property damage must specify the articles lost or damaged so as to inform defendant of the extent of the action.[28] In states where the action for damages for injuries resulting from negligence in operation of a ferry is a statutory remedy, the declaration may charge negligence in the language of the statute.[29] Where the authority of a town to operate ferries rests entirely on a special grant, the complaint in an action against the town must allege the existence of the grant.[30]

Amendment. An amendment introducing an entirely different negligent act than that originally charged, making substantially a new cause of action, will not be allowed.[31] Where allegations of defendant ferryman's negligence are unnecessary, an amendment setting up additional acts of negligence is surplusage and nonprejudicial.[32]

Plea or answer. The plea or answer of defendant ferryman should contain averments constituting a valid defense.[33]

Admissibility of evidence under pleadings. Evidence is not admissible of any losses or injuries other than those alleged in the complaint.[34]

c. Evidence

(1) Burden of proof and presumptions
(2) Admissibility
(3) Weight and sufficiency

(1) Burden of Proof and Presumptions

The burden rests on a plaintiff ferry user to prove his case, but with certain qualifications and exceptions a presumption of negligence may arise against a ferryman by proof of a passenger's rightful presence on the ferryboat and of his injury; and as a common carrier the ferryman has the burden of proving his freedom from negligence, although he need not go further and show how the accident occurred. In a suit against a ferryman common carrier of property with an insurer's liability, the burden rests on the ferryman to show facts relieving him of liability for loss of property committed to his care.

The burden of proof is on the injured passenger to show the ferryman's negligence, resulting in his injuries.[35] There is a class of cases where the na-

Allegations held sufficient

Complaint in action against ferry company and its insurer for negligent killing of passenger, which alleged that passenger, to knowledge of ferry company's employees, was unattended in his drunken stupor, was situated in position of danger on ferry boat, and that employees' failure to provide for his safety proximately caused his death, was held to state cause of action.—Gates v. Bisso Ferry Co., La.App., 172 So. 829.

Sufficiency of notice in summary action

In action against city which operated ferry for injuries passenger sustained, allegedly as result of improper docking of ferryboat, when she fell while boarding boat, notice of motion for judgment alleging that boat was improperly docked stated cause of action and was good as against demurrer.—City of Portsmouth v. Madrey, 191 S.E. 595, 168 Va. 517.

25. Ala.—Hilburn v. McKinney, 85 So. 496, 204 Ala. 158.

Sufficiency of allegations

(1) Count of complaint against operator of ferry for drowning of mules and loss of harness and part of wagon, complaint being open to construction that ferry was a public one operated for county, under Code 1907 § 3023 et seq., was demurrable as omitting to aver duty rested on defendant operator, rather than county, to provide barrier for the boat.—Hilburn v. McKinney, supra.

(2) Complaint, specifically averring that defendant was operating the ferry under a contract with the county whereby he agreed to provide a ferryboat and keep it in good repair and condition to transport persons and property without charge, was not demurrable as failing to aver that defendant did not furnish a safe boat.—Hilburn v. McKinney, 96 So. 61, 209 Ala. 229.

33. Ala.—Hilburn v. McKinney, 96 So. 61, 209 Ala. 229.

Contributory negligence

A plea that plaintiff contributed to the loss, in that he negligently hitched the mules to the wagon after the ferryboat had landed, without calling on defendant to help or aid in controlling them, well knowing they were easily frightened and unmanageable, did not allege sufficient facts to show a duty of plaintiff to call on defendant for assistance.—Hilburn v. McKinney, 96 So. 61, 209 Ala. 229.

Plaintiff's retention of control of property

Where defendant denied the right of recovery on the ground that plaintiff was alleged to have retained control of his mules and wagon, and was in control at the time of the accident, such defense might lessen the degree of care of defendant, but was not a complete defense.—Hilburn v. McKinney, 96 So. 61, 209 Ala. 229.

Duty to maintain road

Where accident occurred as result of defective condition of public road leading to ferry, burden rests on plaintiff to prove that it was the ferryman's duty to maintain such road in good condition.—Calhoon v. Pittsburgh Coal Co., 194 A. 768, 128 Pa. Super. 582.

ture of the accident itself affords proof of defendant's negligence, and where it is held that a presumption of defendant's negligence arises from evidence that plaintiff was a passenger rightfully on the ferry, that he was in the exercise of due care, and that he was injured in transportation, and from facts showing how the accident happened. In these cases the burden shifts to defendant to rebut the presumption of his negligence from the facts shown.[36] The ferryman has the burden of proving his own freedom from negligence causing the accident,[37] or to show affirmatively that plaintiff was contributorily negligent,[38] but he need not go further and explain how the accident occurred.[39] The presumption of defendant's negligence does not arise, however, where the injury is of such a character that it might reasonably have happened without any negligence on the part of the ferryman,[40] or is caused by something not connected with the machinery of transportation,[41] and there is no burden on the ferryman to explain the accident and exculpate himself where the means of knowledge as to what caused the accident are equally within the reach of both parties.[42] The rule as to the burden of proof to show the passenger's due care or contributory negligence varies in the different jurisdictions, it being incumbent on the passenger, in some states, to prove the exercise by him of ordinary care to avoid the injury,[43] while in other states the burden is on the ferryman to prove the passenger's contributory negligence.[44]

Suit on contract for property damage. In an action of contract against a ferryman for loss of, or damage to property, it is sufficient for plaintiff to show the receipt of the property by the ferryman and the loss or damage; the burden is on defendant to show that his failure to perform his agreement was due to a cause which would relieve him from liability.[45]

(2) Admissibility

General rules control admissibility of evidence in proceedings against ferrymen for injury or damage to persons or property committed to their care.

In accordance with the general rules governing admissibility of evidence, evidence in proceedings against ferrymen for injury or damage to persons or property has been held admissible or inadmissible.[46]

(3) Weight and Sufficiency

The general rules apply to weight and sufficiency of evidence in suits against ferrymen for damage or injury, and circumstantial evidence is of probative force in determining the cause of a passenger's death.

Under the general rules governing weight and sufficiency of evidence, in particular cases involving proceedings against ferrymen for injury or damage

Place of accident
In action by intending passenger of ferry for injuries caused by slipping on ice on roadway leading to ferry landing, burden of showing duty if any on owner of ferry landing to maintain roadway in good repair, despite fact that it was public road, was on plaintiff; and inference from language of witnesses that accident happened along roadway or along left side of road would not warrant inference that accident occurred on private right of way so as to impose liability on owner of ferry landing.—Calhoon v. Pittsburgh Coal Co., supra.

Prima facie case shown Evidence of surrounding circumstances admissible

Where the principal issues related to the question as to whether defendant was negligent in operating the boat without gates or barrier for the protection of stock or vehicles, and whether plaintiff was negligent in handling the mules, it was proper to show that the road on both sides of the river was public and was frequently traveled, and that all kinds of vehicles crossed on the ferry, and automobiles frequently made much noise when moving off the boat, and such facts were properly submitted to the jury on the question of what is due care, and what precautions are necessary for the protection of property ferried.—Hilburn v. McKinney, 96 So. 61, 209 Ala. 229.

Evidence of departmental rule inadmissible
In action against the city of New York for injuries sustained by passenger on ferryboat as result of her slipping and falling on a wet deck, evidence of departmental rule as to the sprinkling of sand on wet decks was inadmissible.—Renoud v. City of New York, 296 N.Y.S. 702, 251 App.Div. 851, 868.

to persons or property committed to their care, evidence has been held sufficient or insufficient to support the judgment rendered,[47] or to show particular facts,[48] such as the proximate cause of the death of a ferry passenger [49] or the presence or absence of contributory negligence.[50] In determining whether circumstantial evidence establishes the liability of a ferryman each case must stand on its own facts,[51] but such evidence may in any event be accorded consideration.[52]

Under general rules governing trial of civil actions, which apply to actions against a ferryman for damage to ferry users, questions of fact as to the ferryman's negligence or the plaintiff's contributory negligence are for the jury or trial court on conflicting evidence, and on such evidence it is improper to direct a verdict or to grant a nonsuit. Instructions should conform to the general rules governing instructions in civil causes.

On conflicting evidence questions of fact are for the trial court or jury,[53] such as the public or private character of a ferry,[54] the negligence of defendant ferryman,[55] or the contributory negligence of plaintiff ferry passenger,[56] the accidental or suicidal character of a ferry passenger's death,[57] or

Leaving space reserved for passengers

It was erroneous to withdraw from the jury the issue of possible contributory negligence raised by evidence to the effect that a ferryboat passenger, struck by truck dislodged by bump against slip pilings, had theretofore voluntarily left space reserved for foot passengers and was leaning against gate of vehicular gangway at the time of injury.—Henderson v. Philadelphia & Camden Ferry Co., 170 A. 425, 112 Pa. Super. 42.

Riding in aërial ferry

In action against county, which maintained an aërial carrier operating on a cable for transporting persons across river, by prospective passenger for injuries sustained on collapse of tower which sustained cable and on which passenger was waiting, whether he was guilty of contributory negligence or was a trespasser were questions for jury.—Jacoby v. Chouteau County, 112 P.2d 1068, 112 Mont. 70.

Credibility of witnesses as to suicide threats

In administrator's action against county and ferry companies for wrongful death and damages to an automobile occurring when deceased drove into a ferry slip and drowned, conflicting testimony as to deceased's statements in respect to committing suicide presented a question for jury as to witnesses' credibility.—Corbaley v. Pierce County, supra.

the unauthorized opening of ferry gates by third persons.[58]

Instructions. The general rules, discussed in the C.J.S. title Trial §§ 266–448, also 64 C.J. p 510 note 3-p 1008 notes 15–99, govern in respect of instructions asked or given in suits against a ferryman for injury or damage to person or property committed to his care.[59]

Direction of verdict or grant of nonsuit is improper where the evidence is conflicting as to material facts.[60]

e. Damages

The measure of recovery in a suit against a ferryman for loss or injury is the natural and proximate damage suffered.

The recovery in a suit against a ferryman should be for whatever damage was the natural and proximate consequence of the injury complained of.[61] When property is lost the measure of damages is the value of the property, together with compensation for the actual expenses, and loss of time, caused by the detention on account of the accident.[62]

§ 31. —— On Statutory Bond

The remedy given on a statutory bond of a ferryman has been likened to a common-law action on the case and may be cumulative and not exclusive of a common-law right of action. Such a bond has been held not within a statute providing that an action on an official bond may be brought in the name of the party injured. The complaint should allege facts showing a breach of the bond.

The remedy given on the bond of a public ferryman is in the nature of a common-law action on the case for damages caused by the ferryman's negligence. It may be a cumulative remedy and not exclusive of the common-law right of action.[63] It has been held that a ferry bond is not the bond of an officer, or a bond given in an official capacity, within the meaning of a statute providing that an action on an official bond may be brought in the name of the party injured, but that a complaint improperly brought in the name of the party injured may be amended.[64] The complaint must allege facts showing clearly a breach of the conditions of the bond.[65]

§ 32. Penalties for Violations of Regulations

Unlicensed operation of a ferry may subject the operator to statutory penalties, and a lessee rather than the lessor of a ferry has been held liable to penalties for improper operation.

Under statutes in some states, a ferry owner who

(2) Duties of ferrymen.—McLain v. Easley, 272 P. 66, 150 Wash. 148.

(3) Interpretation of ferry lease. —Norton v. Anderson, 2 P.2d 266, 164 Wash. 55.

Instructions disapproved

Instruction requiring ferrymen to use highest degree of care as to elements other than operations was erroneous, and not cured by subsequent instruction.—McLain v. Easley, 272 P. 66, 150 Wash. 148.

Requested instruction properly refused

If danger was obvious, decedent could not excuse himself from taking passage in ferryboat in reliance on assurance that it was safe, and instruction eliminating question of fact as to how danger appeared to decedent, and whether assurances were given, was properly refused.—Flanagan v. Arnold, 210 N.W. 256, 236 Mich. 180.

Requested instruction improperly refused

Where question whether defendant's servant was subsequently negligent in operation of ferryboat was for jury, refusal of charge that plaintiff was not prevented from recovering because of decedent's negligence in getting into boat was error.—Flanagan v. Arnold, supra.

Conformity of instructions to pleadings

Declaration alleging that plaintiff's decedent tried to persuade operator of ferryboat to return to shore, but he refused was held to charge defendant's subsequent negligence, so as to warrant instruction.—Flanagan v. Arnold, supra.

60. S.C.—Dawkins v. Chester County, 115 S.E. 62, 122 S.C. 8.

Question of proximate cause of ferry passenger's injury or death

(1) Where, in an action by a passenger injured on a ferry against the ferry owners and the owners of a truck which ran into plaintiff, defendant's contention that their negligence in failing to take proper precaution for the safety of deceased was not the proximate cause of decedent's injury was based on facts in dispute, a verdict could not have been directed for defendant nor a nonsuit granted.—Schreiner v. Delaware, L. & W. R. Co., 121 A. 84, 98 N.J.Law 899.

(2) Where plaintiff, after paying defendant ferry company a fare, drove a government mail motor truck to the usual place in defendant's ferryhouse to wait for the boat and dismounted to ascertain if his truck had been injured by a collision, and while mounting the truck was struck by the flying "hook end" of a rope through the negligence of defendant's servants, it was held that plaintiff's dismounting did not justify a nonsuit or the direction of a verdict against him, since such act was not negligence as a matter of law, but presented a condition with no causal connection with defendant's negligence.—Williams v. Pennsylvania R. Co., 115 A. 447, 96 N.J.Law 350, affirmed 117 A. 927, 97 N.J.Law 585.

operates his ferry without license subjects himself to liability for statutory penalties,[66] and he may also become subject to a penalty for breach of his duty to transport, recoverable by the party injured.[67] The lessee of a ferry rather than the lessor is liable for penalties imposed for improper operation of the ferry, but where a person is employed on shares to run a ferry the owner remains liable for such penalty, even though his servant, the share operator, has exclusive control of the management of the ferry.[68]

§ 33. Offenses Incident to Operation

Unauthorized or improper operation of a ferry, charging excessive ferriage, or failure to operate or transport in compliance with the duties of a ferryman, may constitute a criminal offense.

Under statute or otherwise, a ferryman may be guilty of a criminal offense for the unauthorized operation of a ferry,[69] or for a breach of his duty to transport,[70] and it has been said that failure on the part of the owner of the franchise to operate the ferry is an indictable offense.[71]

The indictment should specify the water on which an allegedly unlawful operation occurred,[72] and the burden rests on the prosecution to prove that defendant ferryman lacked a license.[73]

Excess charges. In some jurisdictions, the ferryman is liable to prosecution and fine for charging more than a statutory rate,[74] but this liability attaches only for acts done within the jurisdiction of the state fixing the rate.[75]

FERRIFODINA. In old pleading, an iron mine.[1]

FERROCARRILES. In Spanish, railroads or railways. They have been a subject of legislation in Spain beginning with 1855. The general railway law now in force is that of 1877 which covers such subjects as concessions, eminent domain, operation, etc.[2]

FERROCHROME. A substance produced by reducing chrome iron ore with carbon in an electrical furnace, and containing iron, chromium, and carbon.[3]

FERROMANGANESE. A substance produced by smelting the ore containing iron and manganese.[4]

FERROTUNGSTEN. Tungsten iron or "ferrotungsten" is made from tungsten or wolframite by roasting it, freeing it from sulphur and arsenic by treatment with muriatic acid, and strongly igniting it with charcoal in a closed crucible, giving a sintered or scaly mass which is fusible with iron ore.[5]

FEUDA AD INSTAR PATRIMONIORUM SUNT REDACTA.[29]

FEUDAL. More commonly spelled "feodal" by the old writers, and defined to mean belonging to a fee or feud, pertaining to feuds or fees, relating to or growing out of the feudal system or feudal law; also having the quality of a feud as distinguished from "allodial."[30]

FEUDALISM. The feudal system, the aggregate of feudal principles and usages.[31] It has been characterized as a vague term used to describe a congeries of customs and legal relations by no means uniform throughout Europe and never static, although feudalism had one basic characteristic traceable through all its variations in that it rested on relations to land, the primary factor in a relatively primitive agrarian civilization.[32]

"Feudal courts"

"In the 12th century, a lord qua lord, had the right to hold a court for his tenants; in the 13th century, they became of less importance and for three reasons: The feudal principle would have led to a series of courts one above the other, and the dominions of the large landowners were usually scattered, so that great feudal courts became impossible. The growth of the jurisdiction of the king's court removed the necessity for feudal courts. All the incidents of the feudal system came to be regarded in a commercial spirit—as property. Its jurisdiction became merely appendant to landowning."—Black L.D.

"Feudal law"

The law anciently regulating the property relations of lord and vassal, and the creation, incidents, and transmission of feudal estates. The laws and usages constituting the "feudal law" were originally customary and unwritten, but a compilation was made in the twelfth century, called "Foedarum Consuetudines," which has formed the basis of later digests. The feudal law prevailed over Europe from the twelfth to the fourteenth century, and was introduced into England at the Norman Conquest, where it formed the entire basis of the law of real property until comparatively modern times. Survivals of the feudal law, to the present day, so affect and color that branch of jurisprudence as to require a certain knowledge of the feudal law for the perfect comprehension of modern tenures and rules of real property law.—Black L.D.

"Feudal possession"

"Feudal system"

"The system of feuds. A political and social system which prevailed throughout Europe during the eleventh, twelfth, and thirteenth centuries, and is supposed to have grown out of the peculiar usages and policy of the Teutonic nations who overran the continent after the fall of the Western Roman Empire, as developed by the exigencies of their military domination, and possibly furthered by notions taken from the Roman jurisprudence. It was introduced into England, in its completeness, by William I., A.D. 1085, though it may have existed in a rudimentary form among the Saxons before the Conquest. It formed the entire basis of the real-property law of England in medieval times; and survivals of the system, in modern days, so modify and color that branch of jurisprudence, both in England and America, that many of its principles require for their complete understanding a knowledge of the feudal system. The feudal system originated in the relations of a military chieftain and his followers, or king and nobles, or lord and vassals, and especially their relations as determined by the bond established by a grant of land from the former to the latter. From this it grew into a complete and intricate complex of rules for the tenure and transmission of real estate, and of correlated duties and services; while, by tying men to the land and to those holding above and below them, it created a close-knit hierarchy of persons, and developed an aggregate of social and political institutions."—Black L.D., citing 2 Blackstone Comm. p 44.

FEUDALIZE. To reduce to a feudal tenure, or to conform to feudalism.[34]

FEUDARY. Held by feudal service, or relating to feuds or feudal tenures; hence a tenant who holds by feudal tenure, also spelled "feodatory" and "feudatory."[35]

FEUDATARIO. In Spanish feudal law, a vassal with a fief; also a fund subject to the payment of feudal dues.[36]

FEUDATORY. See Feudary ante.

FEUDBOTE. A recompense for engaging in a feud, and the damages consequent, it having been the custom in ancient times for all the kindred to engage in their kinsman's quarrel.[37]

FEUDE. An occasional early form of "feud" as defined above, in the sense of private war or vengeance.[38]

FEUDIST. A writer on feuds, as Cujacius, Spelman, etc.[39]

FEUDISTA. In Spanish law, a feudist, an author who writes about feuds, or fiefs.[40]

FEUDO. In Spanish law, a feud, or fief; a species of benefice which one gives to another so that the latter may become the former's vassal.[41]

FEUDUM. Law Latin, a feud, fief, or fee; a right of using and enjoying forever the lands of another, which the lord grants on condition that the tenant shall render fealty, military duty, and other services. It is not properly the land, but a right in the land.[42]

Feuda. The plural of "feudum," meaning feuds or fees.[43]

Nature

(1) Escriche, who is disposed to ascribe the origin of the system to the Lombards, says that a "feudo" may be considered as a contract or as a right in a thing similar to a pledge, mortgage, or emphyteusis.—Escriche Diccionario. See also Emphyteusis 30 C.J.S. p 222 notes 24–26.

(2) As a contract the "feudo," or fief, is a reciprocal agreement between lord and vassal, the former conceding the useful ownership (dominio útil) and the latter recognizing the former as the ultimate owner and promising him fidelity, military and other service, and perhaps payment of dues.—Escriche Diccionario.

(3) As a right in a thing a fief, or "feudo," is the title, shared by the lord and vassal, which arises from investiture, and which precludes alienation or encumbrance of the fief without the lord's consent, is forfeited for felonias or feudal crimes, involves certain services, and escheats to the lord on the vassal's death without male heirs.—Escriche Diccionario.

Classification

A fief may be proper or improper. It is the former when it is conceded or granted purely and simply, without determination as to time or service. When conditions as to such matters are added, the fief becomes improper, but in case of doubt the fief is presumed to be a proper one. A fief is "real," that is, royal, when granted by a king or emperor with some dignity or royal privilege, as kingdom, principality, dukedom, etc. A simple fief usually has no such appurtenance. A "ligio," or liege fief, is one by which the vassal bound himself to serve the lord in war against anyone, and is therefore exclusive. The ordinary fief, however, does not preclude the vassal from agreeing to serve another lord in war. Fiefs were also ecclesiastical when the subject was church property, and lay when it was not; they were termed "new" when received by the vassal directly from the lord, and "old" when acquired by inheritance; "hereditary" when transmissible by inheritance or will, and "familiar" when succession is confined to male heirs of the first vassal; "masculine" when succession was so confined, and "feminine" when female heirs were admitted in default of male; "franco" when free from the obligation of personal service; and "personal" when limited to the vassal who received it.—Escriche Diccionario.

42. Black L.D.

Historical

This form of the word was used by the feudal writers; the earlier English writers generally preferred the form "feodum;" and there was a still older word "feum." Usually it denoted a stretch of land, rarely a tenure or mass of rights. It came to be applied to every person who had heritable rights in land. The use of the word by the Normans is exceedingly obscure; "feudal" was not in their vocabulary.—Black L.D.

43. Black L.D.

44. Feudorum libri

The Books of Feuds published during the reign of Henry III, about the year 1152.—Black L.D.

"Feudum antiquum"

(1) In feudal law, a term used to designate an interest in land to which the possessor succeeds as heir to his ancestor.—Priest v. Cummings, 20 Wend., N.Y., 338, 349.

(2) Defined as an ancient feud or fief, a fief descended to the vassal from his ancestors, or a fief which ancestors had possessed for more than four generations.—Black L.D.

(3) A feud which descended to a vassal from an ancestor; one which had been in the family for generations.—English L.D.

(4) In holding that "estate" as generally understood connotes "an immediate descent from A. to B." the court used the phrase "ut feudum antiquum" and said: "In a sense, an estate may be said to come by descent from a remote ancestor, to a person upon whom it has devolved through many intermediate descents."—Gardner v. Collins, R.I., 2 Pet. 58, 92, 7 L.Ed. 347.

Feudum novum or Feuda nova

(1) A new feud or fief, a fief which began in the person of the feudatory, and did not come to him by succession.—Black L.D.

(2) In feudal law, a term used to designate an interest in land which was acquired by the possessor in

FEUDUM SINE INVESTITURA NULLO MODO CONSTITUI POTUIT.[45]

FEUM. An older form of "feudum," defined above.[46]

FEVER. A temperature of the body higher than the normal temperature, appearing as a symptom of disease.[47]

Rocky Mountain spotted fever. A disease of man said to be directly traceable to a deadly virus carried by infected wood ticks, or "hard-shelled ticks," Dermaceutor Andersoni, found throughout the intermountain region.[48]

Typhoid fever. An infectious febrile disease caused by a micro-organism called "bacillus typhosus," introduced into the system by the fingers, or with the food or drinking water. It is contagious, infectious, and communicable.[49]

Yellow fever. An acute, infectious, malignant, paroxysmal disease, characterized by violent fever, jaundice, bloody vomit, hemorrhage, and abdominal pains.[50]

FEW. An indefinite expression for a small or limited number;[51] not many; of small number, indicating a small number of units or individuals which constitute a whole.[52] It is a relative term and of great elasticity of meaning,[53] and has been contrasted with "many."[54]

48. Onset and progress of the disease

These infected transmitting agents attach themselves to man by biting. The virus becomes reactivated within several hours after ingestion of blood in the tick has begun and it is then passed into the body of man. There are two types of infection in man, "ambulatory" and "fulminating." The latter is more often a fatal infection. The period of incubation within man covers a period of from two to fifteen days depending upon the severity of the infection, the resistance of the man and the locality of the bite. In the cases of fulminating infections, the period of incubation is determined as from two to five days, the prodromal period is from two to three days in duration during which time the characteristic chilly sensations, backache, etc., appear. Death occurs between the ninth and the fifteenth day following infection. It is not infrequent that the site of the tick attachment cannot be found. Medical science has some basis for the belief that the virus of an activated tick may enter through the pores of the skin.—Salt Lake County v. Industrial Commission, Utah, 120 P.2d 321, 324.

FIADO. In Spanish law, one for whom another is obligated or accepted as surety, or "fiador."[56]

Al fiado. A phrase indicating that one buys, contracts for, or takes something without presently paying for it, hence equivalent to the English phrase "on credit."[57]

En fiado. Applied to an accused released from custody, the phrase means "under bond." It is also used in the same sense as "al fiado," above defined to express the idea of "on credit."[58]

FIADOR. In Spanish law, surety.[59]

"Fiador lego, llano y abonado," a solvent surety subject to no exemptions or privileges.[60]

FIANCE and FIANCEE. The words are borrowed from the French verb "fiancer," meaning to promise to marry in the presence of a priest; but in English they have a broader significance, referring to all under engagement to marry, whether the declaration has been made in the presence of a priest or not. The English synonym of "fiance" is "affianced husband" and that of "fiancee" is "affianced wife."[61]

FIANCER. French, generally, to pledge one's faith;[62] and, more specifically, to promise to marry in the presence of a priest.[63]

FIANZA. A Spanish word of generic meaning sufficiently broad to designate general obligation, as well as restricted liability under a single instrument,[64] and defined generally in Spanish law as security, bond, or undertaking.[65]

FICTIO LEGIS INIQUE OPERATUR ALICUI DAMNUM VEL INJURIAM.[85]

FICTIO LEGIS NEMINEM LÆDIT.[86]

FICTION. Generally, that which is feigned, assumed, pretended;[87] a subterfuge.[88] More specifically, a false averment on the part of plaintiff which defendant is not allowed to traverse, the object being to give the court jurisdiction, an example being the common-law action of a father for his daughter's seduction which was grounded on the fiction of his loss of her services.[89]

Fiction of law. A legal assumption that a thing is true which is either not true or which is as probably false as true;[90] an assumption or supposition of law that something which is or may be false is true, or that a state of facts exists which has never really taken place;[91] the assumption as true of something known to be false;[92] the assumption, for the purposes of justice, of a fact that does not or may not exist;[93] the legal assumption or invention that something is true, which is, or may be, false; an assumption of an innocent and beneficial character, made to advance the ends of justice,[94] but not allowed to work injustice, or to defeat the policy of the state.[95]

It has been distinguished from "estoppel,"[96] "intendment of law,"[97] and "presumption of law" see Evidence § 117 note 24.

FICTIONE JURIS SEMPER SUBSISTIT ÆQUITAS.[98]

FIDUCIARY.

In General

A general definition of the word which is sufficiently comprehensive to embrace all cases cannot well be given.[17] The term is derived from the civil, or Roman, law.[18] It connotes the idea of trust or confidence,[19] contemplates good faith, rather than legal obligation, as the basis of the transaction, refers to the integrity, the fidelity, of the party trusted, rather than his credit or ability,[20] and has been held to apply to all persons who occupy a position of peculiar confidence toward others,[21] and to include those informal relations which exist whenever one party trusts and relies on another, as well as technical fiduciary relations.[22]

As a Noun

One who holds a thing in trust for another, a trustee;[23] a person holding the character of a trustee, or a character analogous to that of a trustee, with respect to the trust and confidence involved in it and the scrupulous good faith, and candor which it requires;[24] a person having the duty, created by his undertaking, to act primarily for another's benefit in matters connected with such undertaking;[25] also more specifically, in a statute, a guardian, trustee, executor, administrator, receiver, conservator, or any person acting in any fiduciary capacity for any person, trust, or estate.[26] Some examples of what, in particular connections, the term has been held to include and not to include are set out in the note.[27]

While agency is often described as a fiduciary relation, see Agency § 1, "fiduciaries" may be distinguished from "agents."[28]

with meaning of the term it is a very broad one;[32] but it may be defined generally as a relation in which, if a wrong arises, the same remedy exists against the wrongdoer on behalf of the principal as would exist against a trustee on behalf of the cestui que trust.[33] Also referred to as a definition of the term is the statement that a person in a fiduciary relation to another is under a duty to act for the benefit of the other as to matters within the scope of the relation.[34] The term connotes a relation of trust as the basis of obligation of one and of security for the other,[35] embraces both technical fiduciary relations and those informal relations which exist whenever one man trusts in and relies on another,[36] has reference to any relationship of blood, business, friendship, or association in which the parties repose special trust and confidence in each other and are in a position to have and exercise, or do have and exercise, influence over each other,[37] and implies a condition of superiority of one of the parties over the other;[38] but, in relation with undue influence, it does not necessarily imply acts which the law deems fraudulent.[39]

The term has been held synonymous with, and also distinguished from, "confidential relation" see 15 C.J.S. p 823 notes 93, 94. It has been distinguished from "agency,"[40] and "fiducial relation" see Fiducial supra note 15.

dren;[62] nor does the relation necessarily arise between one stockholder and another out of the mere ownership of corporate stock.[63]

Effect of relation. It is against public policy to allow persons occupying fiduciary relations to be placed in positions in which there will be constant danger of a betrayal of trust by the vigorous operation of selfish motives.[64] It is a well-settled equitable rule that anyone acting in a fiduciary relation shall not be permitted to make use of that relation to benefit his own personal interest,[65] except with the full knowledge and consent of the other person, and such other person must be in possession of all his powers before he can be bound by that knowledge or consent.[66] When a fiduciary relation is established between parties, courts of equity scrutinize very closely any transaction between the parties by which the dominant party secures any profit or advantage at the expense of the person under his influence.[67] All transactions between parties in this relation are presumptively fraudulent and void,[68] and the burden of proof is on the party asserting validity with respect thereto.[69]

FIELD. The term has no technical signification in law, but has been frequently employed, in its primary sense, to describe or designate cleared land as distinguished from woodland;[74] cleared land for cultivation or other purposes, whether inclosed or not;[75] cultivated land;[76] a cultivated tract of land; a lot, inclosed and cultivated;[77] a garden;[78] a wide extent of land, suitable for tillage or pasture.[79]

In this sense "field" has sometimes been used interchangeably with,[80] and at others distinguished from,[81] "inclosure;" and has been compared with, and distinguished from, "garden."[82]

In a derived or secondary sense, the word has been defined as meaning the sphere of practical operation, as of an organization or enterprise; also the place or territory where direct contacts, as with a clientele, may be made or first-hand knowledge may be gained; sphere of action or place of contest, either literally or figuratively; hence, any scene of operations or opportunity for activity.[83]

As used in horse racing see the C.J.S. title Gaming § 1, also 27 C.J. p 975 note 46; and in statutes relating to the duty of railroads to fence their tracks see the C.J.S. title Railroads § 572, also 52 C.J. p 43 note 23–p 44 note 53.

Field work. Work in the field, using "field" in the derived sense above defined; specifically the task of gathering scientific data from the field;[84] more particularly in political activities, it is not an uncommon expression, has no mysterious connotation, but is readily understandable by laymen and has been held to include such activities as the circulating of petitions, collecting signatures thereon, and seeing to it that the petitions are properly notarized.[85]

"Fifty-fifty." The expression has a well-defined meaning, conveying to the mind the division of the subject under discussion into halves.[3] Used as descriptive of an agreement, it has been said that the term does not warrant the conclusion that the parties thereto were joint adventurers.[4]

Other phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[5]

FIG. The common name for species of the genus Ficus, and for their fruit.[6] When used without qualifying descriptive terms, with commercial significance, it refers to the dried figs commonly imported and sold in baskets or boxes, and not the preserved fruits.[7]

FIGHT. As a noun, a combat or battle, a hostile encounter or engagement between opposing forces; a combat between two persons or animals, implying force, and suggesting primarily the notion of a brawl or unpremeditated encounter, or that of a pugilistic combat.[8]

As a verb, used intransitively, the term has been defined as meaning primarily to contend in battle or single combat;[9] to strike or contend for victory, in battle or in single combat.[10] Used transitively, it means primarily to combat or to engage or to oppose in battle; to war against;[11] to attempt to defeat, subdue, or destroy an enemy, either by blows or weapons.[12]

"Fighting," in a particular connection, has been said not to apply to actions and movements of a person attacked designed either to disarm the attacker or to get him in a position where he could not use his gun.[13] For specific uses of the word see the C.J.S. titles Affray §§ 2, 3, Homicide § 43, also 29 C.J. p 1128 notes 8–10, and Prize-Fighting §§ 1, 2, also 50 C.J. p 411 note 1–p 413 note 34.

FIGHTWITE. Saxon, a mulct or fine for making a quarrel to the disturbance of the peace;[14] also a payment to a lord possessing soc, or jurisdiction, over a place where a wrong was done.[15]

FIGURE. The numerical character by which a number is expressed or written;[16] either Roman, made with letters of the alphabet, for example, MDCCLXXVI, or Arabic, as follows, 1776.[17] In particular contexts, the term may express measurement of length or extension[18] sections, in a description of land,[19] value in dollars,[20] and other ideas of quantity.[21] The term has been held not to which was expended in the purchase of lands for the use of the new community. The contributors were known as the 'proprietors,' and were deemed to have at least an equitable interest in the lands so purchased. The inhabitants resolved in town meeting . . . that the town be divided 'into fortie house lots, some biger, some less, as men have put in a share, six thousand pounds to be divided in to fortie parts.' By force of this division of six thousand pounds by forty, each lot had a value of one hundred and fifty pounds, and the lots thus divided were subdivided into three fifty-pound parts, with the result that an allotment became known as a 'fifty' or a 'fifty right.' When new purchases were made afterwards with new allotments following, the 'fifties' were still the units." —Beers v. Hotchkiss, 175 N.E. 506, 507, 256 N.Y. 41.

In art. The artificial representation of a form, as in drawing, embroidery, painting, or sculpture; especially the human body represented by art of any kind.[24] It has been held synonymous with "design" see Design 26 C.J.S. p 1238 in Pocket Parts.

FILACER. An officer of the superior courts at Westminster, whose duty it was to file the writs on which he made process.[25]

FILAMENT. A long, thread-like process, a substance like a thread, a slender fiber, indicating that a thread is produced by some process or other which gives to its constituent parts a twist;[26] a separate fiber or fibril of any vegetable or animal tissue or product, natural or artificial, or of a fibrous mineral; as a filament of silk, wool, cobweb, or asbestos; a cortical or muscular filament.[27]

The term has been compared with "strand" and "thread,"[28] and has been compared and contrasted with "yarn."[29]

FILARE. In old English practice, to file.[30]

FILCH. As a noun, a hooked staff used by thieves to snatch articles; also a person who filches or pilfers; and also the thing filched.[31]

As a verb, in its primary and ordinary meaning, to steal, to pilfer; to steal, especially in a small, sly way, to steal privily, to take from another in an underhand way, as by violation of trust or good faith; to take wrongfully from another.[32] The word is ordinarily applied to things of little value, but may apply to the most precious.[33] It carries with it the idea of secrecy.[34] The synonyms usually given are "pilfer," "purloin," "rob," "steal," and "thieve."[35]

FILE.

In General

A word of well defined meaning,[36] which may, however, be used in several senses.[37] It is derived from the Latin word "filum," signifying a thread, string, or wire, and its present application is drawn from the ancient practice of placing papers upon a thread or wire for the more safe keeping and ready turning to them,[38] although the original and technical application of the word "file" has long gone out of use.[39]

As a Noun

Originally, a thread, string, or wire upon which writs and other exhibits in courts and offices are fastened or filed for the more safe keeping and ready turning to them;[40] and hence a paper placed with the clerk, or officer, and assigned by the law to his official custody or keeping;[41] papers put together and tied in bundles[42] as distinguished from papers merely preserved;[43] also, although more loosely, the official custody of the court or the place in the offices of a court where the records and pa-

On file. Deposited,[45] as distinguished from a technical filing.[46]

Other phrases are set out in the note.[47]

As a Verb

——Present Tense. Primarily, from its derivation, to fix upon a string or wire;[48] to string, to fasten, as papers, on a line or wire for preservation;[49] hence, derivatively, to arrange or insert in a bundle, as papers, indorsing the title on each paper;[50] to lay away papers for presentation or reference;[51] to place papers upon a file;[52] to preserve.[53]

More specifically, in connection with the filing of papers, the word may refer to either the act of an individual, or party in bringing the paper and depositing it with the officer, for keeping, or the act of the officer in folding, indorsing, and putting up the paper.[54] In the first sense it has been defined as meaning to bring before a court or legislative body by presenting proper papers in a regular way, as to file a petition or bill;[55] to deliver a paper or instrument to the proper officer so that it is received by him to be kept on file, or among the records of his office;[56] to deposit;[57] to deposit in a court or public office a paper or document;[58] to deposit papers in official custody;[59] to deposit with;[60] to deposit with the proper custodian for keeping;[61] to leave a paper with an officer for action or preservation;[62] to place in the official custody of the clerk.[63] In the second sense, referring to the act of the clerk or other official, it has been defined as to put upon the files or among the records of a court;[64] to re-

Nature of the custody

The custody may, however, be in certain cases prescribed by statute temporary in its nature. The nature of the custody depends in a great measure upon the terms of the law authorizing or requiring the deposit. In the class of the temporary deposits are included such as were made under our statutes for the purpose of registration, or spreading a copy at length upon books provided for the purpose. When a deed or mortgage of land is filed for record with the county clerk, it is for the purpose of having it copied into his books and returned to the party depositing it, and not for the purpose of becoming a permanent record in his office. The books are the records of his office, not the instrument filed."—Brothers v. Mundell, Munzesheimer & Co., 60 Tex. 240, 244.

private rights.[2] In the second sense of receiving for custody, "filing" has been defined as an act of the clerk,[3] receiving a paper into custody, and giving it a place among other papers.[4] It has also been used as referring to or including both acts, and has then been defined as the act of depositing or lodging an instrument for filing in the proper office and the act of accepting it for that purpose;[5] the delivery of the paper or document to the proper officer and the lodging thereof by him in his office;[6] the delivery to the clerk and his acceptance for record in his office;[7] placing a paper in the proper official's custody by the party charged with this duty, and the making of the proper indorsement by the officer.[8] The term generally imports or implies that the document is delivered and received;[9] that the officer authorized to receive it has knowledge of its filing,[10] that the paper shall remain with the clerk as a record,[11] and that it has not been subsequently withdrawn,[12] for the word connotes a deposit for permanent preservation as a public record,[13] unless a contrary intention is clearly indicated;[14] also that any requirements as to custody, place of deposit, and payment of a filing fee have been complied with.[15]

FILL.

As a Noun

In general, that which fills.[45]

In engineering or grading operations, in contrast with "cut," a depositing of earth upon an area, to raise its level;[46] hence an embankment.[47]

Among cattlemen, the feeding and watering of cattle just before they are offered for sale, so as to increase their weight.[48]

As a Verb

——Present Tense. To make full, to complete, to satisfy or fulfill; to possess and perform the duties of; to occupy the whole capacity or extent of, so as to leave no space vacant;[49] to compound, as a prescription.[50] Also the term may be employed as implying a promise to pay.[51]

Used in the sense of to possess and perform the duties of, the word has been distinguished from "appoint" see 6 C.J.S. p 87 note 13.

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[52]

——Filled. The preterit or past participle of "fill."[53] As a participle, the word is used adjectively; and, applied generally to goods, it is not, strictly speaking, a commercial term, although to a limited extent it is used in commerce as a technical term, its meaning depending on its signification among the manufacturers to whose business it relates.[54]

——Filling. The present participle of "fill."[55]

Among civil engineers and contractors the word has a well settled meaning, and as applied by them to street improvements has been defined as meaning to be filled with clay, sand, clean earth, or any solid, imperishable material, raising the surface of a roadway to be improved to a certain height by using earth, clay, sand, or other suitable materials they were of equally extensive import."—Black L.D.

free from animal and vegetable substances or other offensive materials.[56]

As employed by manufacturers of cotton cloth, the term has been defined as the substantial closing of the interstices of the cloth, thus creating a permanent plain surface.[57] In this use of the term it has been distinguished from "starching."[58]

As a verbal noun, the word "filling," in its ordinary sense, means something that fills, and in weaving relates to the threads filling the interstices in the warp and thus constituting an essential element of the woven fabric.[59] In this use, the term has been held synonymous with "weft."[60]

Phrases employing the word, in one or another of the above senses, are set out in the note.[61]

FILLERS. As one of the three classes of leaf tobacco, "fillers" are leaves that make up the main body of a cigar,[62] being distinguished from the other two classes, "binders" and "wrappers."[63]

FILLY. A female colt, a young horse, especially a young mare. The term is also applied sometimes to a lively, roistering, or wanton girl.[64] It has been compared with "horse" and "mare."[65]

"Filtering paper," as including the so-called "filters" or disks of filterferent from that of "softening" water, since the latter involves chemical changes in the water, the two have been said to be at least analogous.[70]

FILTH. Primarily, anything that soils or defiles; defilement; foul, offensive matter; pollution;[71] and so, derivatively, anything that sullies or befouls the moral character.[72]

FILTHY. Containing or involved in filth; foul, dirty, nasty, noisome, polluted, scurvy.[73] As applied to food, the term has been held to include a substance containing bacilli liable to cause disease to such an extent as to make it dangerous for food purposes,[74] and food designed for human consumption containing worms and their excreta.[75] The term may apply to food substances in such condition as to offend the æsthetic tastes and sensibilities of the consuming public; it does not imply necessarily that the food is injurious to health.[76]

In a derived sense, the term has been defined as meaning that which is nasty, dirty, vulgar, indecent, offensive to the moral sense, or morally depraving and debasing;[77] hence contemptible, low, mean, morally foul, or defiled by sinful practices.[78]

In its derived sense, referring to language, ideas, literature, etc., "filthy" is, for all practical purposes, coextensive with "obscene;"[79] but in its primary sense it may be distinguished therefrom.[80]

FILTRATE. The liquid which has been passed through a filter.[81] The use of the word with reference to a particular liqueous mixture indicates that it has been filtered.[82]

FILTRATION. Passing through; the act or process of filtering; the mechanical separation of a liquid from the dissolved particles floating in it.[83]

FILUM. A Latin word signifying a thread.[84] In particular applications, it has been defined as meaning a file, that is, a thread or wire on which papers were strung, that being the ancient method of filing;[85] also an imaginary thread or line passing through the middle of a stream or road.[86]

FIN. French and Spanish, an end or limit, a limitation, or period of limitation.[88]

FINAL. A word of well understood and accepted meaning,[89] derived from the Latin word "finis," end;[90] and descriptive of a boundary or end of something.[91] In its ordinary signification, last,[92] latest; relating to the end; ultimate.[93] In legal parlance, it signifies conclusive,[94] decisive, definitive, as a final judgment,[95] from which there is no appeal;[96] necessarily precluding review;[97] precluding further controversy on the question passed upon;[98] that which absolutely ends or concludes a matter,[99] as in the case of an agreement to accept a particular transaction as "final;"[1] that which terminates or ends a matter or proceeding;[2] although, it has been said, the termination need not necessarily be absolute;[3] for common speech, as well as juridical usage, will sometimes justify a limitation of the word to the jurisdiction of the particular officer or tribunal concerned.[4]

"Final" sometimes has been held equivalent to, and sometimes has been distinguished from, "definitive" see 26 C.J.S. p 681 notes 62, 65. It has been contrasted with, or distinguished from "becoming due,"[5] "effective" see 28 C.J.S. p 839 note 6, "interlocutory,"[6] and "provisional."[7]

References to specific uses are listed in 25 C.J. p 1129 note 42.

(4) It may mark the extent of a boundary of land bounded by rivers.—In re McDonough, 30 U.C.Q.B., Ont., 288, 290.

word conveys the idea of discovering or ascertaining by search or study or especial effort of any kind;[37] and under particular circumstances, may import the discovery of a fact, as distinguished from the determination of a fact in controversy, as by a referee or arbitrator.[38]

As employed with reference to indictments, see the C.J.S. title Indictments and Informations §§ 24–26, also 31 C.J. p 583 note 19–p 587 note 4.

The term has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "apportion" see 6 C.J.S. p 90 note 22, "be of opinion,"[39] "furnish,"[40] "introduce," "procure,"[41] "satisfy,"[42] "think,"[43] and "to the satisfaction of the jury."[44]

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[45] Other phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found see 25 C.J. p 1132 notes 45–51.

——Found. The past participle of "find,"[46] the equivalent of the Latin word "inventus,"[47] and variously defined as meaning chanced upon; fell in with; met with by accident;[48] got at;[49] reached;[50] traced to,[51] in contradistinction to "reside;"[52] also ascertained to lie and be;[53] discovered;[54] perceived;[55] and seen;[56] and, in a somewhat different sense, supplied.[57]

In a particular connection, the word has come to have the meaning of doing business,[58] or being present.[59]

The term has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "caught" see 14 C.J.S. p 35 note 54, "detected" see 26 C.J.S. p 1250 note 24, and "produced."[60] It has been distinguished from "brought" see 11 C.J.S. p 1142 note 4, "gotten,"[61] and "transact or transacting business."[62]

For the meaning of the word as used in various statutory provisions relating to jurisdiction and venue see the C.J.S. titles Copyright and Literary Property § 147, Corporations § 1932 b, Courts § 73, Monopolies § 97, also 41 C.J. p 187 note 41–p 188 note 46, and Venue §§ 7, 88–92, also 67 C.J. p 24 notes 17, 18, and p 100 note 98–p 101 note 20; also as used in statutory provisions governing deportation of aliens see Aliens § 94 d (1), in attachment statutes see Attachment §§ 7, 68, 92, and in statutes

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[63] Other phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found see 25 C.J. p 1133 notes 71–4.

——Finding. A word which imports the ascertainment of a fact in a judicial proceeding.[64] Specifically applied, the term is defined as an ascertainment of facts by the court see the C.J.S. titles Equity § 493, and Trial § 609, also 64 C.J. p 1227 notes 10–16, and 25 C.J. p 1133 notes 8–14, or by an administrative board as the result of a hearing;[65] also, in a trial to the jury, a statement by the court in narrative form of the evidence which a party offers and his claims of proof, as distinguished from a determination of facts as such.[66]

In another sense, the term has been held to mean supplying;[67] and, in the garment manufacturing industry, it is used as a verbal noun, usually in the plural, as referring to canvas, buckles, parts of interlinings, buttons, and thread.[68]

In the sense of ascertainment of facts on evidence presented, the term imports definite action,[69] and has been contrasted with "refusal to consider."[70] The term has been sometimes loosely used as interchangeable with "order" and "report;"[71] has been compared with "decision" see Courts § 181 a notes 71–75; and has been distinguished from "minute entry"[72] and "seizing."[73]

For use of the term in bankruptcy appeals see Bankruptcy § 621 b, c, and with respect to findings of the interstate commerce commission in railroad reorganization proceedings see Bankruptcy § 912 notes 91.3–91.5 in Pocket Parts; also as used on hearing for an injunction see the C.J.S. title Injunctions § 199, also 32 C.J. p 366 notes 5–11, and in compensation proceedings see the C.J.S. title Workmen's Compensation Acts §§ 627–637, also 71 C.J. p 1170 note 68–p 1182 note 90.

Not a "finding" in the strict sense

"The finding in a case tried to the jury is not in the strict sense a 'finding,' since the jury determine the facts established by the evidence and the finding as made by the court is a fair narrative of what each of the parties offered evidence and claimed to have proved, either by direct evidence or by legitimate inferences, of the occurrences of the trial, of the rulings and claims of law made, and the instruction given the jury by the court."—Marks v. Dorkin, 133 A. 915, 916, 104 Conn. 660.

"Finding" in a trial to the court distinguished

"In a trial to the court, the facts found are the court's best judgment of what the entire evidence establishes. If they stand uncorrected, they settle the ultimate facts. In the case tried to the jury the finding as made does not establish the facts. It is merely a fair statement of the facts claimed to have been proven by each party, and 'made with a sufficient fulness to present the questions sought to be raised by the appeal.'"—Marks v. Dorkin, supra.

§ 1. Definitions and General Principles

Personal property is lost in the legal sense only when it is casually and involuntarily parted with. If it is voluntarily laid down and forgotten, or if it is in another's possession, it is not lost. The place where property claimed as lost was found is important in determining that question. Treasure-trove is any gold or silver in coin, plate, or bullion found concealed in the earth, or in a house or other private place, but not lying on the ground, the owner of which is unknown.

Goods or chattels are lost in the legal sense of the word only when the possession has been casually and involuntarily parted with,[1] so that the mind has no impress of, and can have no recourse to, the event.[2] A thing voluntarily laid down and forgotten is not lost within the meaning of the rule giving the finder title to lost property.[3] Although as a general rule the title and right to possession of the finder are not affected by the ownership of the property in or on which the thing lost is found, see infra § 5 c (1), in determining whether property has been lost or only misplaced or concealed, the place in which the property claimed as lost was found is a potent factor.[4] Property in someone's possession cannot be found in the sense of the law of lost property;[5] thus, if the article is in the possession and protection of the owner of the place where it is found, it is not lost in the legal sense.[6] If the chattel is discovered in a public or semipublic place where the public generally is invited and expected to be, the proprietor of the premises occupies no relationship of agent or fiduciary toward the owner, which prevents its being considered a lost article,[7] but, where it is found in a private place, where only a limited class of people have the right to be, or can be, and that class is composed of the customers of the owner of the premises, who has the duty of preserving the property of his customers, it is in the constructive custody of the owner of the premises.[8]

Treasure-trove. At common law a distinction was made between lost property and treasure-trove.[9] "Treasure-trove" is usually defined as any gold or silver in coin, plate, or bullion found concealed[10] in the earth,[11] or in a house or other private place,[12] but not lying on the ground,[13] the owner of the discovered treasure being unknown.[14] If the owner of the property is known, or if it can be ascertained who is the owner, the property is not treasure-trove.[15] It seems to be generally considered that the treasure must be either gold or silver, coin or bullion;[16] but treasure-trove has been held to include paper representatives of gold and silver, especially when they are found hidden with both of these precious metals.[17]

§ 2. Title and Rights of Finder

The finder does not obtain absolute title to the lost property. To obtain any title or rights he must appropriate the property and not merely intend to do so. In many jurisdictions the rights of finders of lost property are controlled by express statutory provisions.

In general absolute title to personal property that is lost is not vested in the finder.[18]

Appropriation. The mere fact of finding is not sufficient to vest in the finder any right or title to the thing found, although he may at the time have intended to appropriate it; his title as such finder may become complete only when he has taken such possession of the thing as its nature and circumstances will permit.[19]

Statutory provisions. The rights and duties of a finder of lost goods are now generally regulated by statutes which provide, inter alia, for the advertisement of the goods found, and that, if the owner does not appear within a certain time, they shall belong absolutely to the finder, or partly to the finder and partly to some public fund; and in some jurisdictions the right is given exclusively to the public, making an allowance to the finder of his necessary expenses and costs.[20]

§ 3. —— Against Owner or His Representative Generally

The finder of lost property or treasure-trove is not entitled thereto as against the true owner. If the true owner is deceased, the finder of lost property is not entitled thereto as against the owner's personal representative, but the finder of treasure-trove has been held to have title as against the heirs of the original owner.

The finder is only the apparent general owner of the thing found, under an uncertain or contingent title which may be defeated by the discovery of the true owner;[21] the owner and loser's title is unaffected by the mere fact that his chattel has been lost.[22] Before a perfect title accrues to the finder, it is necessary that the true owner should have completely relinquished and abandoned his title,[23] although, as appears infra § 8 a (1), the finder's inchoate title is sufficient to maintain trover thereon against everyone except the true owner. Since the finder acquires no title to the goods found, as against the true owner, he can transmit none to any other person;[24] but, if the thing found is of a perishable nature, he may sell it and retain the proceeds for the owner, in case he shall be found.[25] If the true owner dies before his title and right to the lost chattel are discovered, his personal representative has the same right over the lost chattel as he has over other property of decedent's estate.[26]

Treasure-trove. The finder of treasure-trove is not entitled thereto as against the true owner;[27] but the heirs of a person who secreted treasure-trove have been held not entitled thereto as against the finder.[28]

§ 4. —— Right to Compensation and Lien Therefor

The finder of goods is entitled to recover from the owner the necessary and reasonable expenses incurred in the successful recovery and preservation of the goods, but he has no lien therefor. Under some statutes a reward is also provided for.

cannot pay himself for his expense and trouble by using the property for that purpose;[32] nor, as appears in the C.J.S. title Rewards § 31, also 54 C.J. p 796 notes 30–32, in the absence of statute so providing, is the finder of lost property entitled to a reward for finding it if none has been offered. The fact that the finder was caring for like goods is no obstacle to his recovery for services and expenses, if such services and expenses can be ascertained.[33]

Under statutes. Some statutes specifically provide that the finder of a thing is entitled to compensation for all expenses necessarily incurred by him in its preservation and for any other service necessarily performed by him about it, and to a reasonable reward for keeping it.[34] Such statutes have been held valid.[35] They are not inconsistent with statutes providing for the restoration to the owner of the property by the finder, or providing that a finder who knows the owner is guilty of larceny if he appropriates the goods.[36] They are enacted for the laudable purpose of aiding people to find lost property, and must be considered beneficial. In effect they declare it to be the public policy of the state for the good and welfare of its citizens to provide a reward to the finder of lost goods, and in effect allow a compensation for such finding and fix the reasonable value of such services.[37]

§ 5. —— Against Third Persons

a. In general
b. As affected by character of thing found
c. As affected by place of finding
d. Relation of finder to third person
e. Subsequent finder
f. Bailee

a. In General.

In general the finder of a lost chattel not buried in, or attached to, the soil, or the finder of treasure-trove, acquires title thereto and the right to possession as against all except the true owner.

By the general rule of the common law one who finds and appropriates a lost chattel not buried in, or attached to, the soil acquires the title thereto and the right to possession thereof against all the world except the true owner.[38] Under some statutes, however, if the true owner does not appear and claim the property within a certain period after publication of the finding of the article, the finder is entitled to only a specified portion of the property, the state, or some division or agency thereof, being entitled to the other portion.[39]

Treasure-trove. By the early common law the finder of treasure-trove took title thereto against all the world, except the true owner,[40] but by the statute of 4 Edward I the title to treasure-trove was vested in the crown, subject to the claims of the true owner.[41] It has been stated that in this country the law relating to treasure-trove has generally been merged into the law relating to lost property found;[42] but there is authority which seems to hold that the old law of treasure-trove is not merged in the statutory law relating to lost property.[43] In either case, in the absence of statute providing to the contrary the title to treasure-trove belongs to the finder as against all the world except the true owner;[44] and as between the true owner of the property and the state, the state has no claim to treasure-trove.[45]

b. As Affected by Character of Thing Found

In general the character of the thing found does not affect the title of the finder.

In general the rule that the finder of a lost chattel has title thereto against all the world except the true owner is not affected by the character of the thing found.[46] However, under some decisions this does not include choses in action;[47] but banknotes, etc., which, although not money in a strict sense, ordinarily pass as such by delivery from hand to hand, are subject to the same rules as other chattels when they are lost by the owner, that is to say, the finder acquires a complete title as against all the world except the former owner by whom they were lost.[48]

c. As Affected by Place of Finding

(1) In general
(2) Thing imbedded in, or attached to, soil

(1) In General

The title and right to possession of the finder of lost property are not affected by the ownership of the property in or on which it is found, except where the place it is found is such that the article found is in law considered in the constructive possession of the owner of the premises and, therefore, not legally a lost article.

As a general rule the title and the right to possession of the finder are not affected by the ownership of the property in or on which the thing lost is found,[49] unless it is imbedded in, or attached to, the soil, considered infra § 5 c (2). This rule is applicable where the chattel is found in a public or semipublic place, that is, one to which the public generally is invited, or such other place that the owner of the premises is not considered as owing a duty to preserve the property for its owner.[50] Thus, if a lost article is found on the surface of the ground,[51] in the public parlor of a hotel,[52] near a table at an open-air place of amusement,[53] or in a vehicle[54] or the car of a railroad or street railroad,[55] it becomes, except as against the loser, the property of the finder who appropriates it, without any reference to the ownership of the property in or on which the article was found or from which it was taken. So, too, if the thing lost is found within a chattel transferred by sale, the finder takes title to the thing found unaffected by the property rights of the purchaser of the chattel[56] for, unless the purchaser of the chattel had knowledge, when he made his purchase, of the thing contained therein, no title to the thing found passed to him by the sale.[57] However, if the chattel is found in a place such that the owner of the premises is considered in constructive possession or custody of it, even though he had no knowledge of it, and it is, therefore, not a lost article in the legal sense, see supra § 1, the owner of the premises where the chattel is found has the right to the possession of the article as against the finder thereof.[58] Thus, if the thing is voluntarily laid down on a table, counter, or other place and forgotten, or if it is found in such a place and under such circumstances that it appears to have been voluntarily laid down and forgotten, the owner of the shop,[59] bank,[60] or other place[61] where the thing has been left is the proper custodian rather than the person who has discovered it and rather than all other persons except the owner.

(2) Thing Imbedded in, or Attached to, Soil

Chattels buried in, or attached to, the soil belong to the owner of the land as against the finder, unless the article is treasure-trove, in which case it belongs to the finder.

If a chattel is buried or imbedded in the soil and does not belong to that class of chattels which when so found should be considered treasure-trove, see supra § 1, title is in the owner of the soil, unless in some instances at least, the depositor owner is known.[62] Such a chattel becomes a part of the soil and passes by gift, sale, or descent of the real property as a part thereof.[63]

Honey in tree. A person who finds a swarm of bees in a tree on another's land is not entitled to the honey as against the owner of the land.[64]

Treasure-trove. The owner of the soil in which treasure-trove is found acquires no title thereto by virtue of his ownership of the land.[65]

d. Relation of Finder to Third Person

Ordinarily the title and right of possession of the finder of a lost chattel are not affected by his relation to the owner of the place where it was found. Police officers are not entitled to lost property which they find.

The title and right of possession of the finder of a lost chattel are not ordinarily affected by the relation of the finder to the owner of the place where the lost article was found.[66] It has generally been held that, where the finder stands in the relation of servant or employee to a third person, he is not, by virtue of such relation, deprived of his rights as finder, and that the master or employer has no right to the thing found, although it was found on his premises while the finder was engaged in the performance of the duties of his employment.[67] However, it has been held that, where a servant, while engaged in the performance of his duties as such, found an article which had been lost on his master's premises, the master, and not the servant, was entitled to the thing so found.[68]

Police officer. It has been held that a police officer who finds lost property is not entitled thereto as against the city or other governmental agency employing him, even though there is no ordinance or general law governing the matter;[69] and this is particularly true where the rules and regulations of the police force of which he is a member require that lost property found by a member of the force shall be turned over to a specified person, and, if unclaimed, sold, and the proceeds paid into a specified fund.[70]

e. Subsequent Finder

The first finder of a lost chattel has a superior title to that of a subsequent finder.

It is a necessary consequence of the general rule as to the title of the finder of a lost chattel, see supra § 5 a, that the first finder who appropriates the chattel found and then loses it has a superior title to that of a subsequent finder, against whom the first finder's rights can be enforced.[71]

f. Bailee

A finder of a lost article, if it is unclaimed by the true owner, may recover it from a third person to whom he delivered it to be kept for the owner, or for the finder if the owner did not claim it, unless the bailee discovers that the finder intends wrongfully to convert the article.

Where the finder of a lost article has delivered it to a third person to be kept for the owner, or for the finder in case the owner does not claim it, the finder, on the refusal of the bailee to return the article, may recover it, if no claim has in the meantime been made by the true owner.[72] However, where a bailee of a finder ascertains that the finder has the intention wrongfully to convert the property to his own use, it becomes the duty of the bailee to retain it until the owner can be found.[73]

§ 6. —— Joint Finders

Joint finders of lost property take title thereto in common.

If a lost chattel is discovered by two or more persons under circumstances which fairly show that it was found by all, the finders take a qualified title in common.[74]

§ 7. Duties and Liabilities of Finder to Owner

a. In general
b. Care and custody of property

a. In General

The finder of a chattel, if he exercises his option to possess it, should restore it to its owner if he is known, and if he is unknown, should follow any procedure required by statute for discovering the owner. Reasonable opportunity to inspect the property for purposes of identification should be granted a person claiming it as owner.

It is entirely at the option of the finder of lost property whether he will or will not take possession of it;[75] if he does he should restore it to its owner,[76] and he should, in the absence of knowledge as to who the true owner is, follow any procedure required by statute for discovering the owner.[77] It seems that the finder is bound to give to one who claims as owner a fair and just opportunity, dependent on the circumstances of the case, to inspect the property found for the purpose of identification.[78]

b. Care and Custody of Property

The finder of lost property who takes possession of it assumes the duties of a bailee without compensation.

The finder of lost property who takes possession of it assumes the duties of a bailee [79] without compensation.[80] One who voluntarily assumes the duty of such finder also holds as bailee for the owner.[81] One who has found an article and assumed possession of it is bound to exercise only slight diligence, and is responsible only for gross neglect.[82]

§ 8. Actions by or against Owner or Finder

b. Pleading
c. Evidence
d. Trial
e. Measure of recovery

a. Right and Form

(1) By finder
(2) By true owner

(1) By Finder

The finder of lost property or treasure-trove may protect his rights by action against anyone who infringes on them.

The finder may protect his rights by an action against anyone who infringes on them.[83] He may defend the property against all others than the true owner with every remedy which is available to a bailee.[84] At common law he has a special property in the thing found sufficient to enable him to main-

Deposit with governmental agency

(1) Under penal code provision penalizing finder who, having knowledge or means of inquiry as to true owner of lost property, appropriates such property to his own use, and administrative code provision relating to lost property, a finder of lost property is not required to deposit such property with police department to enable true owner to be located through such agency, and, even under amendment to administrative code, has only duty to report the finding to the police department.—Garramone v. Simmons, 30 N.Y.S.2d 465, 177 Misc. 330.

(2) Under administrative code provision dealing with registering and advertising stolen property, property clerk of the police department of the city of New York had no authority to require finder of a diamond to deposit it with him to enable the police department to locate the true owner, notwithstanding title of statute reads "unclaimed, lost or stolen property to be registered and advertised."—Garramone v. Simmons, supra.

Effect of custom

The custom of depositing lost property with the property clerk of the police department of the city of New York for the purpose of advertising for the true owner could not be invoked to take the place of statutes which do not require that lost articles be deposited with the property clerk.—Garramone v. Simmons, supra.

Summary proceeding in federal court

Federal court was held justified in dealing with summary proceeding for return of money to taxicab driver as finder, after government's use thereof as exhibit in criminal case on its merits.—In re Savarino, D.C.N.Y., 1 F.Supp. 331.

84. U.S.—In re Savarino, supra.

tain trover for its conversion against anyone except the true owner.[85] Thus a first finder may maintain trover against a subsequent finder,[86] and, where each of several joint finders of treasure-trove consisting of coins is entitled to the possession of an equal share of the coins, if one joint finder having possession of all the coins refuses to surrender to the others their respective shares, each of such other joint finders may maintain an action of trover against him.[87] Where the finder of money has delivered it to a third person to be kept for the owner, or for the finder in case the owner does not claim it, on the refusal of the third person to return it, the finder may protect his rights by an action against the bailee to recover the money.[88]

(2) By True Owner

The true owner may enforce his rights against the finder by trover, replevin, or, if the property lost was money, or if it was converted into money, by an action for money had and received.

The true owner may enforce his rights against the finder by trover[89] or replevin,[90] or, if it was money that was lost,[91] or if he seeks to recover the proceeds from the finder's sale and conversion of the property,[92] he may bring an action against the finder for money had and received. However, the finder may retain possession of the property until the owner furnishes proof of his ownership, and for doing this he is not liable as for conversion.[93] The owner's right of action for property for the return of which he has offered a reward is not defeated by neglect to tender the reward.[94]

b. Pleading

The general rules of pleading are applicable.

In accordance with the general rules of pleading, considered in the C.J.S. title Pleading, in actions to enforce rights or liabilities arising out of finding lost goods, the declaration must, by definite and certain allegations, aver every material fact which constitutes plaintiff's cause of action.[95] Thus in trover by a finder against his bailee, he must allege some ownership in himself,[96] and, in an action brought under a statute entitling the finder to compensation for his services and reward, the complaint must allege that the goods were lost.[97] The petition should be construed most strongly against the pleader.[98]

Issues, proof, and variance. An allegation of ownership of goods admits proof of general or special ownership.[99] There is no fatal variance between a complaint for money had and received and evidence that defendant found coupons and had them redeemed, for plaintiff had the right to waive the tort and sue in contract.[1]

c. Evidence

The general rules of evidence apply.

The general rules of evidence in civil cases apply in actions to enforce rights or liabilities arising out of finding lost goods.[2]

(2) Evidence in summary proceeding for return of money to taxicab

d. Trial

Disputed questions of fact are for the jury. Where the evidence is convincing and undisputed, a directed verdict is authorized.

Conformably to the rules applicable in civil actions generally, see the C.J.S. title Trial §§ 203–219, also 64 C.J. p 296 note 48–p 367 note 25, in these actions disputed questions of fact are for the jury.[3] Where the evidence is convincing and undisputed, a directed verdict is authorized.[4]

e. Measure of Recovery

In a successful action for conversion of the thing found, defendant is liable for its value and interest thereon from the time of the conversion.

If the finder is successful in an action for conversion of the thing found, defendant is liable for its value[5] and the interest thereon, running usually from the time of the conversion.[6]

FINE.

As a Noun

As a pecuniary punishment imposed on a person convicted of an offense see Fines post. The word, however, does not always mean a pecuniary punishment inflicted by a court in the exercise of criminal jurisdiction. It has other meanings, and its true signification depends somewhat on the context, and its meaning must be gathered from the intention, if it can fairly be ascertained from the language used.[7] It has been sometimes used in cases of contract as meaning liquidated damages,[8] and as synonymous with "forfeit."[9] Also the term has been used in judicial discussion as applicable by analogy to damages in a civil suit assessed wholly with reference to the degree of culpability of the defendant.[10]

In old English law, the term was used as meaning a sum of money or price paid for obtaining a benefit, favor, or privilege, as the ancient fines for obtaining a writ and for alienation;[11] and also used in conveyancing to denote an amicable composition or agreement of a suit, either actual or fictitious, by leave of the court, by which the lands in question become, or are acknowledged to be, the right of one of the parties.[12]

As a statutory method of barring estates tail see Estates § 27 notes 23, 24; and as the common-law method for a married woman to convey realty see the C.J.S. title Husband and Wife § 196, also 30 C.J. p 755 notes 8–14

The noun sometimes has been said to be equivalent to, or synonymous with, but it is more accurately distinguished from, "forfeit," "forfeiture," and "penalty" see the C.J.S. title Fines § 1, also 25 C.J. p 1149 note 10–p 1150 note 27.

13. "Municipal fine"
(1) As used in a particular statute,

As a Verb

To impose a pecuniary punishment or mulct; to sentence a person convicted of an offense to pay a penalty in money.[14] In another sense, to make fine or pure, purify, clarify, or refine.[15]

Fining. In the manufacture of glass, the process of melting in which the purified particles sink and find their level.[16]

As an Adjective

In general, finished; consummate; perfect in form or quality; polished, adroit, in manner or action; delicate, slender, minute, thin, rare, in size, proportion, or consistence: opposed to coarse, gross, crude, rought, unfinished, etc.[17] The term has been distinguished from "good."[18]

Phrases employing the adjective are set out in the note.[19]

FINE ANULLANDO LEVATO DE TENEMENTO QUOD FUIT DE ANTIQUO DOMINICO. An abolished writ for disannulling a fine levied of lands in ancient demesne to the prejudice of the lord.[20]

FINE CAPIENDO PRO TERRIS. An obsolete writ which lay for a person who, upon conviction by jury, had his lands and goods taken, and his body imprisoned, to be remitted his imprisonment, and have his lands and goods redelivered to him, on obtaining favor of a sum of money, etc.[21]

FINELY. Minutely; thinly.[22]

the term has been construed as referring to a fine imposed by a municipal corporation as distinguished from all fines imposed by the laws of the state.—People v. Johnson, 30 Cal. 98, 102.

(2) It usually does not include a penalty given by statute or municipal ordinance where no issue is made as to the legality of a "municipal fine," tax, assessment, or toll.—In re Thomas, 22 P. 80, 80 Cal. 40.

(5) "Finem facere"—to make or pay a fine.—Black L.D.

(6) "Fines le roy"—the king's fines, that is, fines formerly payable to the king for any contempt or offense, as where one committed any trespass or falsely denied his own deed, or did anything in contempt of law.—Black L.D.

(7) "Fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo que il ad de son done"—a fine on acknowledgment of the right of the cognizee as that which he hath of the gift of the cognizor, whereby the deforciant acknowledged in court a former feoffment or gift in possession to have been made by him to the plaintiff.—Black L.D.

(8) "Fine sur cognizance de droit tantum"—a fine upon acknowledgment of the right merely, and not with the circumstance of a preceding gift from the cognizor; this was commonly used to pass a reversionary interest which was in the cognizor, of which there could be no feoffment supposed.—Black L.D.

(9) "Fine sur concessit"—a fine upon concessit, (he hath granted) that is, a species of fine, where the cognizor, in order to make an end of disputes, although he acknowledged no precedent right, yet granted to the cognizee an estate de novo, usually for life or years, by way of supposed composition.—Black L.D.

(10) "Fine sur done grant et render"—a double fine, comprehending the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo and the fine sur concessit; it might be used to convey particular limitations of estates, whereas the fine sur cognizance de droit come ceo, etc., conveyed nothing but an absolute estate, either of inheritance, or at least freehold. In this last species of fines, the cognizee, after the right was acknowledged to be in him, granted back again or rendered to the cognizor, or perhaps to a stranger, some other estate in the premises.—Black L.D.

(11) "Joint fine," in old English law, "if a whole vill is to be fined, a joint fine may be laid, and it will be good for the necessity of it; but, in other cases, fines for offenses are to be severally imposed on each particular offender, and not jointly upon all of them."—Black L.D.

§ 1. Definitions and Distinctions

A fine is a pecuniary punishment imposed by a lawful tribunal on a person convicted of a crime or misdemeanor.

A fine is a sum expressly imposed in lieu of, or in addition to, a term of imprisonment, or as any part of the punishment for an offense;[1] it is a pecuniary punishment imposed by a lawful tribunal on a person convicted of a crime or misdemeanor.[2] Strictly speaking, the term does not embrace those pecuniary penalties or forfeitures provided by statute that a civil action may be brought to recover.[3] In a sense "fine" is synonymous with "punishment;"[4] but a fine is distinguishable from a sentence of imprisonment in that it is pecuniary rather than personal punishment,[5] and one cannot properly be said to be "fined" by imprisonment.[6] A fine is not a debt,[7] nor is a fine a tax levied.[8] The word "fine" as used in some constitutional and statutory provisions has been held to be limited to fines imposed as punishment for offenses against the state and not to include fines imposed for violation of municipal ordinances or regulations.[9]

Amercement distinguished see the definition Amercement 3 C.J.S. p 1044 note 80. Costs distinguished see Costs § 1 b.

Forfeiture distinguished. A fine is a pecuniary penalty, while a forfeiture is a penalty by which one loses his rights and interests in his property.[10] The terms have been used indiscriminately[11] and as synonymous,[12] and it has been held that the word "forfeit," or "forfeiture," when used in a criminal statute to denote a punishment for crime, is equivalent to "fine,"[13] and that a fine may include a forfeiture.[14]

Penalty distinguished. The terms "fine" and "penalty" are not identical in meaning, but are often confused in loose statements.[15] The term "penalty" in its broadest sense includes all punishment of whatever kind,[16] and in the broad sense it is a generic term which includes fines as well as all other kinds of punishments.[17] As generally understood, a fine is a sum of money exacted of a person guilty of a crime, the amount of which may be fixed by law or left in the discretion of the court;[18] while a penalty is a sum of money for which the law exacts payment by way of punishment for doing some act which is prohibited, or omitting to do some act which is required to be done, which violation may or may not be a crime.[19] A fine is imposed in a criminal action or proceeding, but a penalty ordinarily is recoverable in a civil action.[20]

Additional liability

Where a statute imposes liability for actual damages and also imposes additional liability for the same act, such additional liability is a "fine" or a "penalty."—Sunderland Bros. Co. v. Chicago, B. & I. R. Co., 177 N.W. 156, 157, 104 Neb. 319.

When the word "fine" is used in its restrictive sense it does not convey the idea expressed by the word "penalty."[21] While a fine is always a penalty, a penalty is not always a fine.[22] The main distinction between the terms, as used in the restricted sense, seems to be based on the fact that a penalty may be incurred by reason of acts or omissions that involve no idea of criminality.[23] Ordinarily a penalty is a sum certain which goes to the statutory beneficiary, while a fine is discretionary within the limits prescribed and is paid to the state.[24] The terms "fine" and "penalty" are, however, often used as synonymous; and the term "fine" has been held broad enough to include penalties for the violation of law, recoverable in civil actions when such violations are neither made misdemeanors nor felonies.[25] Sometimes the word "penalty" is used to signify a fine.[26] The true signification of these terms, when used in a statute or constitution, must be ascertained according to the ordinary methods of interpretation.[27]

§ 2. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

The imposition and regulation of fines, subject to constitutional restriction, rests within the discretion of the legislature.

Subject to constitutional restriction, the imposition and regulation of fines belong to the legislature, and to its judgment and discretion in this behalf a wide latitude must necessarily be accorded.[28] The general rules as to the construction of penal statutes apply to statutes providing for fines,[29] and such statutes are to be strictly construed.[30]

§ 3. Recovery and Imposition

Fines constitute in whole or in part the punishment for many offenses.

Fines constitute in whole or in part the punishment for many offenses at common law,[31] as well as for many offenses created by statute.[32] Fines are fixed with reference to the object they are designed to accomplish.[33] The degree of criminality of the offense, and the illegality or impolicy of the act intended to be punished or prevented, are elements that are considered.[34]

§ 4. —— Modes of Recovery

A criminal prosecution is the usual mode of recovery of a fine.

As used in constitution
The word "fine," as used in a constitutional provision prohibiting excessive fines, ordinarily is applicable to criminal prosecutions, or quasi-criminal proceedings. 34. Vt.—State v. Constantino, 56 A. 1101, 76 Vt. 192.

Since the word "fine" in its strict technical sense is to be regarded as a punishment for a criminal offense, a criminal prosecution is the usual mode of recovery.[35] However, the mode in which fines and penalties are to be recovered is a matter of legislative discretion;[36] and the method pursued for the recovery of a fine depends on the particular statutes rather than on any rule of general application.[37] Many of the statutes provide for the recovery of fines by civil action [38] or by indictment.[39] A statute providing that on conviction the party guilty of violating it shall be fined or imprisoned or both ordinarily contemplates a criminal proceeding only.[40] So, also, where the statute creating the offense makes it a misdemeanor punishable by fine and imprisonment, without more, an indictment will lie as at common law.[41] The rule has been laid down that in the absence of any special provision as to the mode of procedure, the use of the word "fine" determines the form of the remedy; and the remedy is a criminal prosecution.[42] Where the statute does not prescribe any particular proceeding, but authorizes recovery in any appropriate form of action or proceeding an indictment will ordinarily lie.[43] Where a statute specifies a "bill, plaint or information," as a mode of recovering a fine it has been held that an indictment will not lie;[44] but the contrary has also been held.[45] Under a statute which provides that a forfeiture may be sued for and recovered in a civil action and that the word forfeiture shall include any penalty in money or goods, other than a fine, a criminal prosecution in the name of the state is the proper remedy to recover a fine from a person charged with a public offense committed in violation of a statute of the state;[46] but the word "fine" as used in the statute does not include fines imposed for breaches of municipal ordinances which are not also misdemeanors,[47] and the proper remedy for the recovery of such fines is by civil action.[48]

Nature of civil action. Although the recovery may be sought in the form of a civil action such a proceeding in nature and effect is a proceeding for the punishment of a criminal offense and should substantially adhere to the essential principles governing such proceedings.[49] The technical rules governing summary convictions do not apply with the same strictness to such an action. However, the essential principles governing such summary proceedings, necessary for the protection of the citizen, have never been relaxed, and many of them are applicable.[50]

Statutory mode as exclusive. Where a statute creating a new offense and imposing a fine also prescribes the mode of its enforcement, the mode so prescribed will be held to be exclusive.[51] Where the proceeding is designated in a statute subsequent to that prohibiting the act, or in a subsequent, distinct, substantive clause of the same act, such remedy is not exclusive.[52] Under some statutes by express provision the fine may be recovered by indictment, although the statute defining the offense may provide for another specified remedy.[53]

Waiver of proper proceeding. When the court has jurisdiction of the person of defendant and of the subject matter, the objection that the proceeding is by indictment instead of by civil action is

§ 5. —— Imposition

A fine may be legally assessed only by a judicial officer in a case wherein he has jurisdiction, properly invoked, of the offense charged and of the person of accused.

A fine may be legally assessed only by a judicial officer [55] in a case wherein he has jurisdiction, properly invoked, of the offense charged and of the person of accused.[56] The imposition of a fine necessarily presupposes forbidden conduct by the party punished.[57] The fine must be imposed in compliance with the law at the time the offense is committed.[58] Directions as to the time and manner of payment of the fine must be in conformity with the applicable statutes.[59] As discussed in Criminal Law § 1982, the court or jury in assessing the fine on conviction of an offense must conform to the statute prescribing the punishment for the offense, and as a general rule any departure therefrom makes the sentence illegal.

Province of court and jury. According to the common-law practice, the jury find whether or not the prisoner is guilty, and if they find him guilty the court must assess the fine,[60] but the rule making it the province of the court to assess the fine has been variously modified by statute in the different jurisdictions.[61] Under some statutes the jury must assess the fine,[62] and the jury cannot find defendant guilty and fine him or not fine him as they choose.[63] So, it has been provided that, when a fine is limited between two fixed amounts, it is to be assessed by the jury;[64] and this has been held to be necessary even on a plea of guilty.[65] When a fine is over a certain amount, it must, under some statutes, be fixed by the jury and not by the court.[66] Where the statute fixes with certainty the amount of the fine which can neither be increased nor diminished by the jury, the verdict of the jury need not assess it.[67]

When the jury are not authorized to fix the fine, but that duty devolves on the court, an assessment made by the jury may be adopted by the court as its judgment.[68]

Amount of fine. Where an offense is punishable by fine, the amount thereof is usually left to the discretion of the court to be exercised within constitutional and statutory boundaries.[69] Statutes frequently place limits on the amount of fines, and within such limits the amount of the fine imposed is discretionary with the court;[70] but the sentence as so imposed must conform to the statute,[71] and the fine cannot exceed the amount prescribed by law.[72]

Where the statute fixes the minimum amount of fine to be imposed on conviction of a certain offense, the court or jury has no authority to impose a judgment for an amount less than such minimum.[73] Under some statutes where the jury assesses the fine at less than the lowest limit prescribed, the court may render judgment for the lowest limit fixed by law.[74]

The power of the legislature to prescribe excessive fines is discussed in Criminal Law § 1978 c.

Joint offenders, who are jointly indicted and tried, must be severally fined.[75]

§ 6. Payment or Security

Except as otherwise authorized by statute, a fine must be paid in money.

In the absence of language to the contrary, it will be presumed that the court in imposing a fine contemplated payment of the fine in the ordinary currency of the country.[76] Except to the extent that he is authorized to do so by statute an officer has no authority to receive anything other than money in payment of a fine;[77] and it has been held that a court officer, by accepting a promise to pay, discharges the sentence and becomes bound for the fine, and that he must collect the fine from the promisor.[78] Under statute in some jurisdictions it has been held that fines may be paid in county warrants,[79] in coupons from state bonds,[80] or by defendant giving his promissory note [81] or some other security.[82] The nature of the security which may be accepted is dependent on the provisions of the statute, and the security given and accepted for the payment of a fine must conform to the statute.[83] The failure of such security to conform with the provisions of the statute, however, does not invalidate it as a common-law obligation, and binds the principal and surety for the payment of the amount named therein.[84]

A void sentence is not affected by the payment of the fine imposed by it.[85]

Confession of judgment. As a substitute for the cash payment of a fine and imprisonment in default of payment, provision is made by statute in some jurisdictions for a confession of judgment by defendant for his fine and costs, with good and sufficient sureties.[86] Under some of these statutes a tender of security for a confessed judgment for a fine may be made to the court, and need not be made to the clerk.[87] Some of these statutes require more than one surety.[88] The court may refuse to accept a judgment by confession unless good and sufficient sureties are furnished as required by statute.[89] The practice of allowing a par-

To avoid imprisonment

Under some statutes, if defendant appealing from a conviction for misdemeanor desires to preserve his right to discharge his liability by paying the fine, he must confess judgment therefor with sufficient sureties.—Jackson v. Nesmith, 147 So. 175, 226 Ala. 389.

ty committed for nonpayment of a fine to confess judgment with sureties in satisfaction of the original judgment has been adopted in some jurisdictions apart from statutory authority;[90] but in other jurisdictions the method is deemed to be purely statutory and unknown to the common law.[91]

Replevying judgment. The effect of replevying a judgment assessing a fine has been held to be to merge the judgment, unless it is void for want of jurisdiction.[92]

Time of payment. Although it has been held that the law requires immediate payment of the fine, or imprisonment,[93] it has also been held that when an alternative sentence of fine or imprisonment is passed the court should fix some reasonable time within which the prisoner may pay the fine;[94] and if the court fails to do so, the law will allow defendant a reasonable time within which to pay the fine.[95] What constitutes a reasonable time depends on the circumstances of each particular case.[96] Some statutes prescribe the time within which defendant has a right to pay.[97]

Statutory authority to a justice of the peace to grant leave to pay a fine or costs by installments, justifies leave to pay both fine and costs in that manner.[98]

To whom payment is to be made. The officer or officers entitled to receive payment of a fine is largely a matter of statutory regulation,[99] and, in order to discharge defendant from further liability for a fine, payment or tender must be made to an official authorized by law to receive it.[1] While the sheriff may not be the proper officer to whom the payment of the fine should be made,[2] it has been held that, where all other conditions requisite to entitle defendant to his discharge have been complied with, a tender to the sheriff is sufficient.[3]

Interest on fines. A fine imposed by the judgment of the court on a person convicted of crime does not bear interest under a statute allowing interest on judgments.[4] This has been held true, although the enforcement of the judgment was stayed by bond pending defendant's writ of error.[5] Where under statute a fine draws interest, a tender of an amount insufficient to pay both fine and interest is bad.[6]

§ 7. —— Effect of Death

A fine abates on the death of the person fined.

As a general rule, a judgment for a fine imposed as a punishment for an offense is abated by the death of defendant pending an appeal,[7] and a fine cannot be enforced after the death of defendant as a claim against his estate.[8]

Embody, 37 Pa.Dist. & Co. 280, affirmed Commonwealth to Use of Bradford County v. Embody, 17 A.2d 620, 143 Pa.Super. 354.

§ 8. Enforcement of Payment

For particular matters relating to the enforcement of fines see the sections immediately following.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 9. —— By Execution against Property

A fine ordinarily may be enforced by execution against defendant's property.

After a fine has been imposed by the sentence of the court, it is regarded as in the nature of a debt of record due the state,[9] and ordinarily it may be enforced by execution against defendant's property [10] both at common law [11] and under statutes in many jurisdictions.[12] However, it seems that in some jurisdictions a fine can be enforced only by imprisonment and that an execution cannot issue against the property of defendant.[13] The execution may issue whether the sentence is for a fine alone, or a fine coupled with a definite term of imprisonment;[14] and under some statutes it may issue, although defendant's body has already been taken in execution for the fine.[15] However, under a statute providing that a judgment that defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine is satisfied, and providing that defendant shall be entitled to a credit on the fine at a certain rate for each day of imprisonment, it has been held that the imprisonment of defendant for the full period operates to satisfy and discharge the judgment in full, see infra § 12, and that thereafter there is no authority to issue an execution based on such judgment.[16] Executions in these cases are, as a general rule, governed by the principles applicable to executions in civil cases,[17] and this rule has been specifically provided for by some statutes.[18]

§ 10. —— By Execution against Person

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, where a judgment for a fine is rendered in the absence of defendant, a special writ of capias pro fine issues against him.

At common law, where a judgment for a fine is rendered in the absence of defendant, a special writ of capias pro fine issues against him, the exigency of which is that his body be taken and committed to jail until the fine is paid,[19] and provision is made by statute in many states for the use of this writ in the enforcement of the payment of fines.[20] Such a writ is a substitute for a fieri facias,[21] and is in all respects an execution.[22] The right to issue a capias pro fine is not affected by statutes abolishing the writ of capias ad satisfaciendum.[23] Although a judgment imposing a fine may

Delay in issuance

Under a statute providing that the clerk of the court in which the conviction is had shall, at the end of the term, issue an execution for every fine that shall have been imposed during the term and remains unpaid, a failure to issue an execution at such time does not invalidate a writ subsequently issued, where the delay was largely caused by defendant. —People v. Pierson, 253 Ill.App. 114.

Restraint held illegal

A restraint under a capias pro fine which is not signed by the issuing justice, which does not show the amount due or unpaid on the fine, and which was executed four days after its return day, is illegal.—Ex parte Palvado, 129 S.W.2d 306, 137 Tex.Cr. 308.

expressly award a capias pro fine for its collection,[24] the writ may issue in the absence of an order in the judgment for its issuance,[25] unless the judgment imposing the fine expressly provides some other mode for its enforcement.[26] It has been held that the fact that execution against property may or may not issue does not prevent the incarceration of defendant under capias pro fine.[27] It appears that a capias pro fine can issue at any time before the judgment is paid although an execution against property does not issue.[28] Even where the right to issue a capias pro fine is suspended by the levy of a fieri facias, yet where the property levied on is released, the suspension ceases and the capias may be issued.[29] Where a judgment in a criminal case is void, a capias pro fine issued in furtherance of execution and enforcement of the judgment is also void,[30] and where a judgment for a fine is merged in security, such as a replevin bond, given and accepted under statutory authority, a capias pro fine cannot properly be issued thereafter.[31] Imprisonment on a wrongfully issued capias pro fine may be prevented by injunction in the proper court.[32]

Capias ad satisfaciendum. A capias ad satisfaciendum in the form appropriate to civil cases was not issuable at common law for enforcing the payment of fines,[33] although a different rule obtains under statute in some jurisdictions.[34]

§ 11. —— By Imprisonment

As a general rule, a fine may be enforced by imprisonment.

As a general rule, the right to impose a fine gives authority to compel payment of the fine by imprisonment,[35] even in the absence of a statute especially providing therefor;[36] and where the punishment for the offense is a fine, it is a part of the sentence that he stand committed until the fine is paid.[37]

Imprisonment of defendant until the fine is paid is no part of the penalty for the offense, but is merely a means of compelling obedience to the judgment of the court.[38] If he refuses to pay, he is not sentenced to a term in prison; the duration of his imprisonment is in his own control;[39] by payment

Forfeiture of specific sum
Since a provision for forfeiture of a specific sum is equivalent to the imposition of a fine for that amount, a statutory provision that one convicted shall "forfeit" a specific amount authorizes imposition of a fine and the imprisonment of accused until it is paid.—Ex parte Alexander, 39 Mo.App. 108.

Females
A female can be committed to the county jail to enforce payment of a fine, notwithstanding a statute providing that every female person who shall be convicted of any offense punishable by imprisonment shall be sentenced to the state industrial farm for women, since imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine is not punishment inflicted for the commission of the offense.—State ex rel. of the fine he can at any time secure his release, as discussed infra § 12. The sentence is not, therefore, open to the objection that the magistrate rendering it has no jurisdiction of offenses which are punishable by imprisonment.[40]

The practice and authority for directing that one ordered to pay a fine stand committed until it is paid is now commonly provided by statute;[41] and, although there is authority to the contrary,[42] even in the absence of a provision in the judgment that defendant should be imprisoned on making default in payment of the fine, the law, under such a statute, supplies the deficiency.[43] This is a proper

Condition of probation
The imposition of a fine as a condition of probation is not a judgment imposing fine within a statute providing that a judgment that defendant pay a fine may also direct that he be imprisoned until the fine be satisfied.—Ex parte McVeity, 277 P. 745, 98 Cal.App. 723.

County ordinance may authorize court to impose jail sentence as alternative to payment of fine levied thereunder.—People v. Sayre, 70 P. 2d 546, 26 Cal.App.2d Supp. 757.

Judgment construed
Judgment held to impose a sentence of six months' imprisonment, but to give the party convicted the opportunity to escape such punishment by the payment of a fine, rather than to provide for imprisonment for nonpayment of the fine.—Ex parte Frankovitch, 213 P. 39, 190 Cal. 439.

Statute construed
A statute prescribing, as punishment for public drunkenness, a fine "To be paid in money" does not mean that defendant may not be sentenced to hard labor if he fail or refuse to pay the fine. The statute is to guard against payment in depreciated fine and forfeiture claims issued by the county.—Chambers v. State, 157 So. 230, first case, 26 Ala.App. 200, certiorari denied 157 So. 230, second case, 229 Ala. 328.

Stay bond
(1) Under some statutes, if defendant shall be fined on a conviction for a misdemeanor, and shall stay the collection of such fine by executing a stay bond, and thereafter shall fail to pay the fine so stayed within the time fixed, he shall be committed until he shall have served out the fine or shall have paid it.—Ex parte Taylor, 45 P. 2d 1110, 57 Okl.Cr. 149—Ex parte Bailey, 296 P. 998, 50 Okl.Cr. 53.

(2) The fact that the stay bond has been forfeited and suit to recover the penalty has been ordered does not affect this rule.—Ex parte Colbert, 5 P.2d 765, 52 Okl.Cr. 392.

Unauthorized fine
Imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine which is in excess of that authorized by statute is improper.—Ex parte Brandamour, 108 So. 895, 91 Fla. 889.

Federal courts
(1) Under 18 U.S.C.A. § 569, the court has been held to have discretionary power to order defendant imprisoned in case of his failure to pay a fine.

(3) The intention to take from court its authority to commit defendant until fine is paid, or defendant is otherwise discharged according to law, should clearly appear from provisions of statute and should not rest on inference.—U. S. v. Ridgewood Garment Co., D.C.N.Y., 44 F.Supp. 435.

Nunc pro tunc order
Where conviction and sentence imposing fine and imprisonment did not provide an alternative of further imprisonment for nonpayment of fine and did not order imprisonment of defendant for nonpayment of fine, trial court was without jurisdiction, when time of imprisonment expired, to make an additional order imprisoning defendant until the fine was paid, not exceeding a certain sum per day.—Ex parte Claudette, 69 P.2d 1021, 21 Cal.App.2d 688.

Subsequent written judgment
Where court orally pronounced against one convicted of driving a motor vehicle while he was intoxicated, a fine and a jail sentence, and two days later the judge signed a written judgment containing the additional provision that on motorist's failure to pay the fine he must serve an additional day in jail for every two dollars of the fine remaining unpaid, the additional provision was invalid.—State ex rel. Perry v. Garecht, 297 N.W. 132, 70 N.D. 599.

In federal courts
(1) In the federal courts, if the direction for imprisonment until the fine is paid is omitted from the judgment, the remedy by execution is exclusive.—Hill v. U. S. ex rel. Wampler, Pa., 56 S.Ct. 760, 298 U.S. 460, 80 L.Ed. 1283—U. S. v. Ridgewood Garment Co., D.C.N.Y., 44 F.Supp. 435—U. S. v. Smith, D.C.Pa., 28 F.Supp. 726.

(2) It is discretionary with the court to order defendant imprisoned in case of his failure to pay a fine; and if the court does not direct such imprisonment, the clerk is acting without authority when he makes such an entry a part of the commitment.—Boyd v. Archer, C.C.A.Wash., 42 F.2d 43, followed in, C.C.A.Ga., Van Gorder v. Aderhold, 61 F.2d 1044.

(3) It has been held, however, that a sentence to pay fine in criminal case implies commitment of defendant until fine is paid or he is otherwise legally discharged, whether sentence does or does not include in addition to fine specific term of imprisonment.—U. S. v. Wampler, D.C. Md., 10 F.Supp. 609.

In Minnesota it has been held that one sentenced to pay a fine in a justice's court cannot be imprisoned to enforce payment, unless the justice so determines when the sentence is pronounced and therein specifies the duration of the confinement for nonpayment.—State v. Rice, 177 N.W. 348, 145 Minn. 359.

means for the collection of a fine, and is not regarded as a part of the punishment.[44] Some of these statutes are confined to cases of misdemeanors and do not authorize imprisonment for the nonpayment of a fine imposed as part of the punishment on a conviction for a felony;[45] and before the court has jurisdiction to provide, on a conviction for a felony, a term of imprisonment for failure to pay a fine, such procedure must be authorized under the act providing the punishment for the crime, or must be otherwise provided for by law.[46] Under statutes in some jurisdictions, where the party is convicted of an offense and sentenced to pay a fine, it is within the discretion of the court to order his imprisonment until the fine is paid.[47] It is generally held that a person sentenced to pay a fine may be imprisoned for nonpayment under a general law authorizing imprisonment for nonpayment of fines, although the particular statute under which he was convicted contains no provision for enforcement of the fine by imprisonment.[48] In some jurisdictions where all offenses are statutory and punishments are regulated by statute, it is held that a court has no authority to commit for nonpayment of a fine in the absence of statute specifically authorizing the commitment.[49] If a statute imposing a fine prescribes another method for its enforcement, the court has no authority to sentence one convicted of violating the statute to imprisonment for the nonpayment of the fine imposed.[50] Since a provision for forfeiture of a specific sum is equivalent to the imposition of a fine for that amount, a statutory provision that one convicted shall "forfeit" a specific amount authorizes imposition of a fine and the imprisonment of accused until it is paid.[51]

The imprisonment for the nonpayment of fines and the statutes providing therefor have been repeatedly held not to be in violation of constitutional prohibitions.[52]

Where both fine and imprisonment are imposed. As a general rule, where the punishment for an offense is both fine and imprisonment, the court may order defendant, for a failure to pay the fine, to be imprisoned, and that such imprisonment begin after the expiration of the term fixed as a punishment for the crime.[53] In some jurisdictions it is held that a statute which provides for imprisonment in default of payment of fine extends only to cases where a fine alone is imposed, and not to cases where both imprisonment and fine are specified as the punishment.[54] In other jurisdictions, however,

Justices' and police courts

The construction of the statute relating to superior courts, as set forth in the text, should be given to a similar statute relating to justices' and police courts.—People v. Sayre, 70 P.

the application of similar statutes is not so limited,[55] nor is it necessary that the part of the sentence imposing imprisonment should be enforced before requiring defendant to work out his fine.[56]

Necessity of first proceeding against property. Apart from express statutory requirement,[57] it is not a condition precedent to the power to imprison that an effort should have been made first to satisfy the fine out of the property of defendant.[58]

Place of confinement. As a general rule, where the sentence is to pay a fine and in default of payment to be imprisoned, the imprisonment may and should be in a common jail or workhouse, rather than in a prison or penitentiary.[59] Under some statutes authorizing imprisonment for the nonpayment of a fine, if the primary punishment includes a term of imprisonment in a prison, the convict may be required to serve out his fine in the same institution and need not be transferred to a county jail for this purpose.[60] The intent of a statute providing that no person shall be committed to the penitentiary, reformatory, or other state institution for the recovery of a fine has been held to be to prevent defendant's sentence to the penitentiary, reformatory, or other state institution from being extended by compelling him to submit to further imprisonment to pay his fine.[61] Under such a statute, where the primary punishment includes a term of imprisonment in the state prison, it is proper to order that, if at the expiration of the penitentiary sentence the fine is not paid, defendant should be confined in a county house of correction until the fine is paid or worked out.[62] Of course, a convicted person cannot be sentenced, on nonpayment of a fine, to confinement in a place not authorized by the statute providing for the places of confinement in such cases.[63]

A statute authorizing the imprisonment of federal prisoners for the nonpayment of fines does not, in the absence of express provision, confer authority to imprison in the state prison.[64]

§ 12. —— Duration of Imprisonment and Discharge Therefrom

a. In general
b. Discharge from imprisonment

a. In General

Ordinarily, under the various statutes, a person sentenced to pay a fine may be imprisoned until the fine has been paid or settled in accordance with law.

Where punishment for felony is only a fine or a term in jail, or both, under some statutes the imprisonment for failure to pay the fine should be in the jail.—Johnson v. State, 72 S.W.2d 288, 126 Tex.Cr. 466.

Workhouse or jail
There is no difference between workhouse and jail in relation to confinement under sentence for default of fines and costs in criminal cases. —State v. Sherrill, 27 Ohio N.P.,N.S., 31.

In many and probably most of the states, the duration of the imprisonment for nonpayment of fine is expressly regulated by statutes,[65] and the imprisonment imposed cannot exceed the time as so limited.[66] Ordinarily, under the various statutes, it is proper to provide in the judgment that defendant shall be imprisoned until the fine has been paid or settled in accordance with law,[67] and a common provision for the satisfaction of fines is for a per diem credit for the time imprisoned.[68] It has been held that a statute providing that defendant who is adjudged to pay a fine may be committed until the fine is paid, but prescribing no particular term of imprisonment, does not authorize a commitment for a specific term unless the fine is "sooner paid."[69] Some statutes limiting terms of imprisonment in a county or city jail apply only to misdemeanors and have no application to such imprisonments for failure to pay a fine imposed on conviction for a felony.[70] In the absence of a statute limiting the duration of the imprisonment to enforce the payment of a fine, it seems that the convict may be imprisoned for an unlimited time in default of payment of the fine.[71] A constitutional provision forbidding indefinite imprisonment is not violated by a sentence imposing a fine and directing the commitment of defendant until it is paid,[72] for the reason that the punishment is the fine, and

Failure to provide work
In West Virginia, where a person has been sentenced to confinement in the county jail to pay a fine and costs, and to work on the county roads or in the preparation of road materials, under the provisions of Code 1931, 17-15-1, he cannot be detained for more than ten days after the expiration of the term of imprisonment for the payment of the fine and costs, as provided in Code 1931, 50-18-9, unless he is furnished work on the county roads, or in the preparation of road materials.—State v. Stephenson, 164 S.E. 38, 112 W.Va. 218.

Judgment should define term of imprisonment as required by statute.—State v. Dill, 196 N.W. 992, 197 Iowa 208—State v. Ludden, 194 N.W. 49, 196 Iowa 275—State v. Williams, 191 N.W. 790, 195 Iowa 374.

Suspended sentence
The fact that more than two years had elapsed since the imposition of a fine, which was improperly suspended, and the taking of defendant into custody to enforce the fine does not relieve defendant of serving time for the fine, as he is not within a statute providing that no convict shall be held in continuous confinement for failure to pay a fine for a period of more than two years.—Cameron v. Termination on payment the committing to custody is only a means of its enforcement.[73]

Some authorities hold that the term of imprisonment for the nonpayment of a fine is not limited by statutes prescribing a maximum period as punishment for the offense,[74] but in other jurisdictions, sometimes by virtue of express statutory provision, the contrary is held.[75] In some jurisdictions, in view of a statute conferring on one who is unable to pay a fine, and who has been confined in prison thirty days for nonpayment, the right to be discharged, it has been held that the imposition of a term of imprisonment exceeding thirty days for nonpayment of a fine is improper.[76]

Concurrent sentences. A statute providing for the allowance of a per diem credit on unpaid fines for each day the prisoner remains in jail has been held not to authorize the application of the same credit at the same time to two or more fines imposed on the same individual in separate sentences for separate violations of law.[77] Where by statute the fine and costs are made a part of the penalty, and where a judgment and sentence on a second or subsequent conviction runs concurrent with a prior judgment and sentence, it has been held that the fine and costs in the subsequent judgment and sentence are discharged by imprisonment under the prior sentence in the same manner as the judgment of imprisonment is discharged.[78]

Deduction of time during unauthorized release. Where one sentenced to imprisonment for the nonpayment of a fine is released by the officer without authority, the time of his absence cannot be considered as spent in imprisonment in satisfaction of the judgment.[79]

Reduction of imprisonment by partial payment. It has been held that one committed for nonpayment of a fine must remain in custody for the whole of the term fixed in the sentence, unless the whole fine is sooner paid, and that the prisoner is not entitled to a reduction of his term for partial payment of the fine.[80]

Time of commitment and suspension of sentence. When a person may be sentenced to pay a fine and also to be imprisoned as a punishment, the term of imprisonment for the enforcement of the fine will begin after the expiration of the term of imprisonment inflicted as a punishment.[81] It has been held that, while a court should immediately commit defendant to imprisonment on failure to pay a fine imposed, yet if the court extends indulgence to him by giving him time in which to pay, a mittimus subsequently issued is not void.[82] However, it has also been held that a court has no power to suspend execution of a sentence except as incident to a writ of error or some other legal ground; that, where the court has sentenced defendant to pay a fine and to stand committed until it was paid or, in default of payment, until the expiration of a prescribed period, the term of imprisonment on failure to pay the fine commences at once; and that, if the court without legal cause suspends execution of the

Justices' or police courts

Pen.Code § 1205, which is contained in a title dealing with proceedings in the superior court and which provides that the imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine shall not exceed the maximum period for which imprisonment might be imposed as a punishment for the offense, does not apply to convictions in justices' or police courts, which are governed by Pen.Code § 1446, authorizing imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine not to exceed one day for each dollar of the fine. Consequently, one fined in such a court for an offense which is not punishable by imprisonment may be imprisoned for nonpayment of the fine.—Ex parte Kennerly, 214 P. 857, 190 Cal. 774—Ex parte Huewitt, 282 P. 406, 102 Cal.App. 24—Ex parte Maldonado, 275 P. 495, 97 Cal. sentence until further order, and no further order is made until after the expiration of the period, defendant cannot thereafter be committed, although the fine remains unpaid.[83]

b. Discharge from Imprisonment

Payment of the fine, or compliance with a statute providing for relief from such imprisonment, entitles one imprisoned for nonpayment of a fine to a discharge. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine does not relieve defendant of his liability for the fine.

To authorize a discharge, there must be a strict compliance with the statutes prescribing the methods by which it may be obtained.[84] As a general rule, defendant is entitled to his discharge when the amount of the fine has been fully paid;[85] when the fine has been remitted by the proper authority;[86] when defendant has remained in custody the length of time required by law to satisfy the amount of the judgment;[87] or when he has satisfied the judgment against him by complying with such statutory provisions as are in force, to enable him to avoid imprisonment.[88]

A proper tender of the fine to an officer authorized to accept it entitles defendant to his discharge from further custody,[89] but, when such tender is made after the time which the law allows for paying fines, it does not have the effect of payment entitling defendant to a discharge.[90]

Where a prisoner is conditionally discharged, in accordance with statute, it has been held that he may be imprisoned on failure to comply with the conditions.[91]

Inability to pay. Under the theory that a fine is not a debt but a punishment for crime, a person in confinement under execution for the nonpayment of a fine imposed in a criminal proceeding is not entitled to the benefit of general acts passed for the relief of insolvent debtors,[92] unless such acts expressly include persons imprisoned for nonpayment of fines;[93] but where the action to enforce the fine is a qui tam action to recover a penalty, civil in its nature and not criminal, it has been held that defendant is entitled to the benefit of relief under insolvent debtors' acts.[94] Statutes in many jurisdictions, however, make special provision for the discharge of one imprisoned for nonpayment of a fine,

In Ohio

(1) Insolvent Debtor's Act does not apply to a person convicted of a misdemeanor and sentenced to pay a fine and costs and to stand committed to a workhouse "until such fine and costs shall be paid or the prisoner be otherwise discharged according to law," since the act specially excepts a case in which the judgment requires imprisonment until the fine, penalty, and costs are paid. The phrase that such prisoner might be "otherwise discharged according to law" does not bring the convict within the act, as he might be so discharged by pardon, parole, or credit on such fine, as provided by law, until the amount is so paid. —Boyer v. State ex rel. Haly-Burton, 162 N.E. 38, 118 Ohio St. 582, followed in State ex rel. Shephard v. Miller, 174 N.E. 140, 122 Ohio St. 616.

(2) An earlier court of appeals case had held to the contrary, in which case it was also decided that an act prohibiting remittance of fine or sentence did not apply to commissioner of insolvents, acting under Insolvent Debtors Act, and that, on failure of officers unanimously to consent to indigent prisoner's parole, prisoner's only remedy was release by commissioner of insolvents.—Kohler v. State, 156 N.E. 510, 24 Ohio App. 272.

upon compliance with certain specified conditions.[95] To be entitled to a discharge thereunder, the prisoner must be within the terms of the statute.[96] One of the usual provisions under such statutes is that the prisoner must have served a minimum time before he is entitled to a discharge.[97] Under some statutes, it has been held that where fines on different counts constitute parts of the sentence under one indictment or information, and commitments thereon run to the same type of institution, one period of imprisonment of the minimum time satisfies the statute.[98] It is no ground for a refusal to discharge defendant who is unable to pay the fine that some of defendant's friends are able to pay it, or that defendant may at some indefinite time do so if he is kept in prison.[99] Ordinarily the statutes require an application to the court in which the conviction took place;[1] and an affidavit as to defendant's inability to pay.[2]

Imprisonment as discharging fine. Undergoing imprisonment for nonpayment of a fine does not in most jurisdictions operate to relieve defendant of his liability for the payment of the fine,[3] and a mere release from imprisonment is not a release of the fine.[4] Under some statutes, allowing defendants credit on fines of certain amounts for each day of imprisonment, the imprisonment for the full period operates to satisfy the judgment in full;[5] and the prisoner may at any time pay the sum remaining

Repeal

The statute providing for relief of persons imprisoned and who were too poor to pay or secure fines and costs imposed by judgment of court was not "remedial" in character, but was an amendment to state's criminal laws prescribing punishment imposed for certain offenses and should be read into such laws as a part thereof. Where statute was in effect at time relator was convicted, relator was entitled to benefit of such statute, notwithstanding that statute was repealed without saving clause more than month prior to time that relator would have been entitled to a release under provisions of such statute.—Hutton v. State ex rel. Moore, 131 S.W.2d 11, 175 Tenn. 44.

Since police court of District of Columbia was a court of the United States for the trial and conviction of offenders against the National Prohibition Act, it was also treated as a court of the United States for the relief of such convicts under the provisions of the National Indigent Prisoners' Act, 18 U.S.C.A. § 641.—Green v. Peak, 65 F.2d 809, 62 App.D.C. 176.

In Alaska

(1) Act of congress, approved May 24, 1935, 49 U.S.St. at L. p 289, 48 U.S.C.A. § 101a, provided that the district court of Alaska shall be deemed a court of the United States, within the meaning of 18 U.S.C.A. § 641, providing for the relief of poor debtors imprisoned for nonpayment of fines. It appears that congress intended that § 641 of this act should be made applicable to all poor convicts imprisoned for nonpayment of fines in Alaska, whether they were confined on a judgment of the district court or on a judgment of a justice of the peace.—U. S. v. Stromberger, 9 Alaska 689.

(2) Prior to the enactment of this statute, it was held that 18 U.S.C.A. § 641 did not apply to the district court of Alaska.—In re Kehoe, 7 Alaska 51.

Express provision otherwise

Where the statute providing for the relief of poor convicts qualifies its application by the phrase "Except when otherwise expressly provided," a convict sentenced to imprisonment under a statute providing that, in default of payment of fine, he shall be imprisoned for six months is not entitled to the relief of the statute. —Violette v. Macomber, 134 A. 561, 125 Me. 432.

Sentence to labor in payment

Where a proper order is entered requiring the payment of a fine in labor at a per diem credit, defendant, under some statutes, cannot secure a discharge under the statute providing for the relief of poor persons imprisoned for fines.—People v. Herman, 245 Ill.App. 94.

Part payment

Where relator was convicted of a misdemeanor in justice court and fined one dollar and costs, amounting to thirteen dollars and fifty cents, on which relator paid seven dollars and fifty cents, relator was not entitled to be released after serving two days in jail on ground that statute which would have required relator to serve minimum of ten days if he had paid nothing did not apply because relator did not owe both fine and costs.—Ex parte Harrington, 148 S.W.2d 1110, 141 Tex.Cr. 347.

Work at hard labor

Under some statutes where the judgment provides that defendant shall work at hard labor until his unsatisfied and claim his discharge.[6] In some jurisdictions where defendant has been sentenced to pay a fine and costs and in case of default to serve a term in the county jail, and where he has secured his release by giving bond to pay the fine within a certain time, if he surrenders himself and begins serving his alternative term of imprisonment before the bond is defaulted, an execution on the bond should not be enforced while he is serving the alternative sentence; and if the alternative sentence is fully satisfied, the bond should be duly canceled.[7]

Improper discharge or escape. If a prisoner, after being fined and ordered into custody, escapes before his term of imprisonment expires, with or without the consent of the officer into whose custody he has been placed, he is not thereby legally set at liberty and may be retaken and imprisoned.[8]

§ 13. —— By Application of Defendant's Funds in Possession of Court

Defendant's funds in the possession of the court may be applied in payment of a fine imposed on him.

Where money is deposited in lieu of bail for a prisoner,[9] or is found on the person of the prisoner when arrested for intoxication and searched by the police,[10] it may be applied in payment of any fine imposed on the prisoner. Even though money deposited in lieu of bail was so deposited by a third person, it may be applied to the satisfaction of the fine imposed against defendant.[11] Although the judgment is in the alternative and would be satisfied by either payment or by imprisonment, the prisoner has no right to elect to be imprisoned instead of thus paying the fine.[12]

§ 14. —— By Working Out

In the absence of statutory authorization, a court has no power to sentence one on whom a fine has been imposed to hard labor in default of the payment of the fine, but provision for working out fines is usually made by statute in the various jurisdictions.

Unless so conferred by statute the court has no authority to sentence one on whom a fine has been imposed to hard labor in default of the payment of the fine.[13] Under the statutes in many jurisdictions, however, subject to some modifications in some instances, it is proper to hire out or to put to work on public improvements, on a per diem credit, persons who have been fined and who have defaulted in payment thereof;[14] and when the earnings of fine is satisfied, imprisonment is a complete satisfaction of the fine.—Commonwealth v. Winchester, 300 S.W. 606, 222 Ky. 193.

Failure to confess judgment
(1) In some jurisdictions, one failing to pay a fine assessed against him, or to confess judgment therefor with proper sureties, will be sentenced to hard labor for the county for a period sufficient to pay the fine at a per diem rate.—Harris v. (2) Where defendant cannot pay the entire fine, the court should allow a confession of judgment for such part of the fine as defendant is able to make, with proper security, and impose a sentence for hard labor for such part as is not paid or confessed.—Bowen v. State, 12 So. 808, 98 Ala. 83.

Improper return
The return, by the superintendent of the penitentiary, of a prisoner, sentenced to the convict road gang to work out time for nonpayment of a fine, to the sheriff of the county from which the prisoner was sentenced, under the erroneous impression that the prisoner had completed his term, did not alter his position as a member of the convict road force, but he was still a member of such force, and should be returned to complete his sentence.—May v. Dillard, 114 S.E. 593, 134 Va. 707.

Not imprisonment at hard labor
A sentence to work on the public works of the parish is lawfully imposed under a statute providing for the working of persons sentenced to the parish jail, and is not imprisonment at hard labor.—State v. McGuire, 94 So. 896, 152 La. 953.

Rate per diem
General statute prescribing working rate was held to repeal a prior statute prescribing a different rate for fines for a specific offense.—By-the prisoner for such services equal the amount of the fine and costs, the obligation is discharged and the prisoner is entitled to be released.[15] Some of these statutes are considered to be in the interest of the convicted person, as they authorize the shortening of the period of imprisonment.[16] Some of such statutes have been held to apply only when the imprisonment is for the nonpayment of a fine imposed as a punishment for a misdemeanor and not for a felony.[17] It has been held that a person who is in custody accused of a felony cannot be hired out for the purpose of satisfying a fine;[18] and he is not entitled to credit on the fine for the period of such custody.[19] A rule or regulation made by the prison authorities whereby it is provided that a convict held in custody under sentence of a court to work out fines or costs shall receive credit for labor voluntarily performed by him before conviction and while in prison awaiting trial is unauthorized and void.[20] It has been held that a law reducing a per diem allowance as a credit on a fine when working it out by manual labor can have no application to a judgment which was rendered and in process of execution prior to the passage of the law.[21] Under some statutes a person sentenced to hard labor if he defaults in paying a fine has the option of either paying or replevying, or serving out the fine,[22] and where defendant is placed at hard labor, he is not subject to release unless the fine is paid or replevied.[23]

Matters concerning convict labor generally are discussed in Convicts §§ 13–26, the employment of convicts on public works generally in Criminal Law § 1992, and the requiring of labor for payment of costs in criminal proceedings in Costs § 461 b.

Effect of inability to work. Some statutes permit a person working out his fine to be discharged on the ground of inability to work. Under such statutes there must be a sufficient showing of such inability.[24] By statute in some jurisdictions a convict who from age, disease, or other disability, physical or mental, is unable to do manual labor, shall not be required to work, but shall remain in jail until his term of imprisonment is ended or until the fine and costs charged against him are discharged at the rate of one dollar for each day of such confinement in jail.[25]

Effect of invalidity of contractor's bond. Where a person sentenced to pay a fine and committed to jail in default of payment thereof has been released under a county convict bond which is void, he may be arrested.[26] Under such circumstances it has been held that the fact that he may have settled with his hirer or principal in the bond does not satisfy the judgment for the fine;[27] and that he is not entitled to his discharge, although he worked long enough to have discharged the fine which he believed he was working out.[28]

§ 15. —— Lien of Judgment Imposing Fine

Under some statutes, a judgment imposing a fine constitutes a lien on defendant's property.

Some statutes provide that a judgment imposing a fine shall constitute a lien on defendant's property,[29] and such lien attaches immediately on the docketing of the judgment.[30] Such statutes apply whether the judgment is one of fine and imprisonment[31] or whether it is simply a judgment for fine without imprisonment.[32] Some statutes have been held to create a lien on the property of defendant, not only in the hands of the accused, but also in the hands of any person possessing or holding it, after the arrest is made or indictment is found, until accused is discharged or the fine adjudged against him is paid. The lien also attaches to defendant's after-acquired property.[33] Where the owner of property is found guilty but conveys the property before enforcement of the fine, the same owner on subsequently acquiring title to the property, takes it subject to the judgment, even though in the particular jurisdiction the judgment would not theretofore have been a lien on the property.[34]

§ 16. —— Staying Collection

Under some statutes the collection of a fine may be stayed for a period by giving a bond.

Some statutes provide for the giving of a bond to stay the collection of a fine for a certain period.[35] These statutes have been held not to infringe on the pardoning power vested in the executive.[36]

§ 17. Recovery Back of Fine Paid

A fine involuntarily paid may be recovered back, but one voluntarily paid cannot be so recovered.

A fine illegally imposed may be recovered back where it was paid involuntarily or under duress, for example, where it was paid to avoid or obtain release from imprisonment;[37] but there can be no recovery where the fine, although illegally imposed, was voluntarily paid under a mistake of law,[38] or where the payment was induced, not because of threatened imprisonment but to avoid further inconvenience and trouble.[39] The mere fact that the judgment imposing a fine is void, as being in excess of the jurisdiction of the court, does not constitute a sufficient ground for recovering back money paid without objection or protest.[40] If defendant has an alternative to making payment of the fine, the payment must be regarded as having been voluntary and therefore not revocable.[41] Accordingly, where at the time of the payment of a fine which has been imposed on him, accused has the right to an appeal and pays the fine before appealing, the payment will be deemed a voluntary one and the fine cannot be recovered back even though the conviction is set aside.[42] Where the whole transaction culminating in payment is improper, illegal, and in defiance of law and defendant plays a prominent part therein with full knowledge of the facts, considerations of public policy may preclude a recovery.[43] Neither the court nor any federal officer has authority to make an agreement obligating the United States to repay a fine in case the statute under which it is exacted shall be declared to be unconstitutional, and the district court, in the absence of a special jurisdictional statute, is without jurisdiction in a suit to recover a fine exacted under an unconstitutional statute.[44]

Estoppel. A person otherwise entitled to recover back a fine paid may be estopped by his acts and declarations to set up the want of jurisdiction of the tribunal imposing it or the fact of duress in its payment.[45]

Persons liable. Ordinarily a fine, if recoverable back, may be recovered from the person receiving it.[46] Under a statute prescribing both fine and imprisonment for a violation of its provisions, it has been held that, where the person sentenced has paid the fine, he cannot recover it in an action against the justice, who imposed it, in his individual capacity, where the fine is only erroneous but not void as being without jurisdiction.[47] It has been held that whatever may be the defects in the proceedings whereby the fine was collected, the county is not answerable for the money so collected, unless it is shown to have been paid into the county treasury.[48] So it has been held that no action can be maintained against the United States for the recovery of a fine illegally imposed by a military commission while it remains in the hands of the military officers.[49] Where a fine has been paid under a misapprehension of the law, the officer who imposed the fine and undertook to regain and refund it by an express promise has been held liable under such promise.[50]

Restitution after vacation of judgment. Where a fine illegally imposed has been paid, on reversal of the judgment a writ of restitution may issue against the parties who received the fine.[51] However, restitution is not necessarily a matter of right,[52] being dependent on whether the payment was voluntarily[53] or involuntarily made.[54] Recovery may be had, where the imposition of the fine was adjudged under such circumstances as to make it proper that restitution should be ordered, in order to restore defendant to his legal rights.[55] Where there is no statute prescribing the procedure for the restoration of a fine paid by defendant, where the conviction has been reversed and a new trial ordered, the procedure in civil cases on reversal may be followed.[56] A right to restitution does not exist after reversal by an intermediate appellate court and during the pendency of an appeal to a still higher court.[57]

Actions. Indebitatus assumpsit for money had and received, it has been held, is a proper form of action against the government or a county for the recovery back of a fine illegally collected.[58] So, also, it has been held that an action for money had and received is the proper form of action to recover from a justice of the peace a fine illegally imposed by him.[59]

Jurisdiction of an action to recover back a fine from a city is not vested in a municipal court of the city of New York.[60]

A complaint or petition in an action to recover a fine illegally imposed must state facts from which the court may determine that the payment was compulsory.[61]

§ 18. Remission of Fine

The power to remit fines is usually vested solely in the executive branch of the government, but in some jurisdictions this power may be exercised by the courts.

The general pardoning power which is vested in the president and the governors of the various states in the United States usually extends to the remission of fines,[62] and in any case the executive may discharge from imprisonment for nonpayment.[63]

The fact that a statute directs the disposition to be made of a fine does not interfere with the power of the executive to remit such fine.[64]

When the authority to remit a fine is vested in one branch of the government, that authority cannot be usurped by any other branch.[65] As a general rule, under the constitutions and statutes in the various jurisdictions, the courts cannot remit fines which have been lawfully and finally imposed,[66] but under the constitutions and statutes in some jurisdictions this power is extended to the courts.[67] Under some statutes, a court with jurisdiction concurrent with that of the court imposing the fine also has power to remit fines,[68] but such power should not be exercised until the court of original jurisdiction has had an opportunity to reconsider its own judgment.[69] The right to intervene, under such a statute, must be exercised only after a clear case of abuse of discretion; and the sentence pronounced must stand unless it is either illegal or unjust or plainly excessive.[70]

The authority to exercise the power to remit a fine continues until a vested right intervenes,[71] but thereafter it cannot be exercised.[72] The power to remit fines only authorizes the remission of fines in pursuance of the provisions of the law.[73] The power to remit the whole of a fine includes the power to remit a part thereof.[74] Where a court has power to remit a fine, it ought not to exercise it unless some good reason for so doing is shown.[75] A remission of a fine should not be based on the good conduct of the prisoner,[76] or on a comparison of previous fines imposed against defendant,[77] nor is such remission to be ordered as a matter of private interests, calculated on the basis of the effect of such fine on the business of the party concerned.[78]

Where power is granted to suspend the collection of a fine for a limited period of time, there is no power to make an indefinite suspension of the fine; and a suspension for more than the period prescribed is void ab initio, and not valid for such period.[79]

Until payment to county

Under some statutes, when fines are paid by prisoners, the money should go into the county treasury, and, until it finds its way there, or is in some way appropriated to the use of the county, it is subject to remission by executive clemency. Accordingly, where a contractor, under contract with county for hire of county prisoners, accepted, pursuant to agreement, defendant's check for half the amount of prisoner's fine, so that the prisoner, taken into custody of sheriff for purpose of collecting fine or making delivery to contractor, was released, such contractor could not recover from defendant on the check, payment of which was stopped after the governor remitted fine.—Hendrix v. a part of the fine, it will not be extended beyond that part.[80] It has been held that a commutation merely releasing the property of defendant from liability does not relieve him of any personal liability;[81] and that a respite of the collection of a fine after it has been replevied does not release the surety in the replevy bond.[82] In order for remission of a fine to be effective, there must be a compliance with the conditions on which it is granted.[83]

§ 19. Disposition of Proceeds in General

The disposition to be made of the proceeds of fines is a matter of constitutional and statutory regulation.

By the common law all fines belong to the crown, or in this country to the state as succeeding to the prerogative of the crown.[84] Constitutional or statutory provisions very generally prescribe the application and disposition to be made of fines, and distribution is to be made in accordance therewith.[85] Accordingly, under the various constitutional and statutory provisions, such funds, or the proceeds of particular fines, or the proceeds of fines imposed by particular courts, should be paid over to the state,[86] county,[87] town or city,[88] fish and game

Violations of Highway Law

(2) The provision contained in the Highway Law § 280 et seq., with reference to payment of fines to the state, was intended to be of general application, the exception being made for fines collected for the violation of city ordinances, and hence a city, in order to be entitled to retention of fines collected, must bring itself within the exception by clearly establishing that informations charged violations of city ordinances.—People v. City of Yonkers, 30 N.Y.S.2d 678, 177 Misc. 406.

(3) Village, under such statutes, cannot retain fines which have been collected for violations of the village ordinances, when the offenses should have been prosecuted under the Highway Law.—People v. President, etc., of Village of Ossining, 265 N.Y.S. 521, 238 App.Div. 684, affirmed 191 N.E. 571, 264 N.Y. 574.

(4) The charter provision of a city penalizing intoxication which violates public decency is not an "act in relation to the use of public highways by motor vehicles," within the meaning of the Highway Law. Where the officers of the city elected to prosecute drunken drivers only under such a charter provision, the state could not recover fines thus collected, despite impropriety of the practice.—People v. The proceeds of fines should be disposed of within or at the time contemplated by the statute directing such disposition,[98] and where there has been a failure to pay over as directed by statute, the sum

Faulkner, Ga., 18 S.E.2d 749.

Statute construed
(1) Under a statute providing that "money arising from fines, or collected on forfeited recognizances in the superior courts, or for a violation of the penal laws, shall be first applied to the extinguishment of the insolvent lists of the officers bringing it into court and those of justices and constables pro rata, and then to the orders of former officers in proportion to their claims," a former solicitor general, during whose term the fine was assessed and appeal urged, is not entitled to claim the fine as against the solicitor general in office when the fine is paid.—Lane v. Duke, 139 S.E. 122, 37 Ga.App. 146, affirmed 144 S.E. 652, 166 Ga. 849.

(2) The approved cost bills of the immediate predecessor in office of an incumbent are not entitled to priority over those of former officers, unless such immediate predecessor is the officer bringing the funds into court.—Dade County v. Lyemance, 108 S.E. 825, 27 Ga.App. 420.

(3) After the costs of the officers who bring funds into court have been paid, the surplus does not belong to the county to the exclusion of former officers who have itemized bills of costs approved by the court, even though such officers may not be the immediate predecessors of the incumbents.—Dade County v. Lyemance, supra.

(4) Where a clerk of the superior court has issued subpœnas for witnesses to appear before grand jury, and has properly presented his account therefor, and the account has been allowed by the judge, this insolvent cost will be paid out of the fines and forfeitures fund as other insolvent costs are paid.—Dade County v. "Clear proceeds"
Under a constitutional provision appropriating the clear proceeds of all penalties and forfeitures of all fines to the school fund, the "clear proceeds" of a fine includes the total sum, less only the sheriff's fees for collection in case the fine and costs are not collected in full.—State v. Maultsby, 51 S.E. 956, 139 N.C. 583.

97. Court expenses
Where a portion of the net amount of all fines collected is appropriated to a particular purpose, the expenses of operating the court cannot be deducted in determining the sum appropriated.—City of Owensboro v. Board of Trustees of Public Library of Owensboro, 276 S.W. 143, 210 Ky. 482.

Expense of hiring detectives
Where one half of the money arising from fines in the enforcement of the prohibition laws belongs to the state, municipal councils are not authorized to expend or appropriate any of such portion for the purpose of hiring attorneys, detectives, or secret service officers.—State v. Felton, 148 N.E. 230, 112 Ohio St. 519.

so withheld has been held to bear interest from the time it should have been paid.[99] Likewise, it has been held that the interest accumulated on funds derived from fines is to be distributed among the parties entitled to the principal in the same proportion.[1]

Constitutionality of statutes. In the absence of constitutional restrictions,[2] the legislature may make such disposition of fines as it may deem advisable,[3] and may change the disposition thereof at will.[4] Where the constitution has already provided for the distribution of the fine, a legislative provision inconsistent therewith is invalid;[5] but, as in other cases, where the invalid part is separable from, and independent of, the remaining parts of the statute, its invalidity will not affect the validity of the remainder of the statute.[6]

In view of the fact that fines, when paid, become public funds, it has been held that the person fined cannot attack the validity of the statutory disposition of the funds, and that only the state has the right to interfere to prevent the fine from being illegally diverted.[7]

Actions for wrongful disposition. Where a disposition unauthorized by law has been made, of the proceeds of fines, the right thereto may be enforced in an appropriate action.[8] The action must be brought within the period of time limited by statute;[9] and the complaint must state a cause of action.[10] Where the statute makes a particular appropriation of the proceeds of fines imposed in a police court, it is no defense in an action against the city that the funds have been paid into the city's general revenue fund and used for other purposes.[11]

§ 20. Rights and Remedies of Informers

Where a statute so provides, an informer may be entitled to a portion of the proceeds of a fine.

The practice of paying a moiety of fines to informers was in frequent use in England from very early times; and in this country congress or the legislature in fixing fines has in many cases provided, with a view to stimulating prosecutions, that an informer should be entitled to a part of the fine.[12] If a whole or any part of a fine is to go to an informer for setting the prosecution afoot, the statute must so provide.[13] It seems that a party claiming an informer's share must be the first informer.[14] One may be entitled to an informer's share by giving information leading to other information.[15] It is not necessary that he shall be a witness in the case or have such personal knowledge of the crime as to make him a competent witness.[16] Under some statutes, an informer who attempts to aid the accused person to escape forfeits his right to a share in the fine.[17] A person whose duty it is to disclose information, and who violates such duty if he does not disclose it, cannot be an informer.[18] It seems that to entitle the informer to his reward, his name need not be entered on the docket or appear on the records of the court in connection with the prosecution.[19] Under some statutes in order for an informer to be entitled to a part of the fine, his name must be written or indorsed on the indictment or at its foot,[20] but, in the absence of a statute so requiring, it has been held that it is unnecessary that the informer sign the complaint.[21]

The judgment in the prosecution in which the fine is imposed should be rendered in favor of the state;[22] and where it is so rendered, an execution thereon in favor of the informer is invalid.[23] The informer's share, if not claimed, is payable to the state.[24]

Under the various state constitutions making provision for the application of the proceeds of fines to educational or other purposes, acts of the legislature giving shares of fines collected to the informers have been upheld in most instances.[25] However, where the constitution provides for the disposition of the entire amount of the fine, such statutes have been held unconstitutional.[26]

Actions. The right of the informer to a portion of the fine is complete and enforceable only when the fine has been collected.[27] Complainant, under a statute imposing a fine, cannot recover in an action of debt against the person fined that portion of the fine to which, by the terms of the statute, he may be entitled, in the absence of a special provision to that effect.[28] Under a statute providing that all fines and penalties, when recovered, shall be paid to the county or city where the same may be imposed, unless directed to be paid otherwise by the law imposing them, but that if there is an informer he shall have half, unless otherwise provided, it has been held that the state had no interest in, and could not maintain, an action against a sheriff to recover fines which he collected and claimed as informer's fees.[29] An interpleader proceeding between several persons claiming an informer's share in a fine collected has been held to be in equity.[30] The burden of proof to the right to the informer's portion of a fine is on the person who claims to be the informer, or on the person who claims, as of right, to withhold moneys from the state on the ground that they belong to the informers.[31]

FIRE.

As a Noun

In the popular understanding of the word, in contrast to the technical meaning developed from a scientific analysis of its nature and properties, it is an effect rather than an elementary principle;[30] and has been specifically defined as combustion with the presence of flame or glow;[31] the effect of combustion;[32] the evolution of light and heat in the combustion of bodies; the visible heat or light evolved by the action of a high temperature on certain bodies, which are in consequence styled inflammable or combustible.[33]

The term has been held equivalent to "burning" and "ignition."[34] It has been distinguished from "combustion" or "spontaneous combustion" see 15 C.J.S. p 242 notes 81, 84, and from "heat."[35]

As construed in policies of insurance see the C.J. S. title Insurance §§ 809–816, also 26 C.J. p 340 note 45–p 342 note 86.

I. CRIMINAL LIABILITY

§ 1. Nature and Elements of Offense

Various offenses exist both at common law and under statute arising out of the burning or setting fire to property of various kinds and under certain conditions. Crimes involving the burning or setting fire to property other than buildings or similar structures are considered infra §§ 2–8. Criminal liability for failure to extinguish a fire as provided by statute is considered infra § 15; criminal liability for fires caused by negligence is considered in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 306, also 45 C.J. p 1371 note 16–p 1373 note 39. The crime of arson, in so far as it involves the burning or setting fire to buildings or other habitable structures, is considered in the title Arson.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 2. —— Burning Another's Property

The willful and malicious burning of another's property usually constitutes a punishable offense both at common law and under statute.

The act of willfully and maliciously burning another's property, other than buildings and similar structures and their contents, such as stacks of hay or grain, grasses, fences, woods, and the like, usually constitutes a punishable offense.[1] The act is punishable as a misdemeanor both at common law[2] and under most of the statutes relating to such burnings,[3] although in some jurisdictions and under some circumstances the offense constitutes a felony.[4]

What acts are necessary to a conviction under such statutes depends, of course, on the language of the particular statute.[5] "Willfully" within the meaning of such a statute means with evil intent, legal malice, or bad purpose,[6] and the "malice" must have as its object some person, ordinarily the owner of the property and not the property itself.[7]

§ 3. —— Burning One's Own Property

Statutes exist making it a punishable offense willfully or negligently to set fire to one's own property of a designated nature under varying circumstances. So setting fire to one's own property to defraud an insurer is made a crime.

Under some statutes it is a misdemeanor willfully or negligently to set fire to one's own woods, or fallow, or prairie land, or other specified areas,[8] or to do so without giving proper notice thereof to the owners of adjoining lands,[9] or willfully or negligently to let a fire kindled upon his own wood or prairie land escape to the injury of an adjoining landowner's property.[10] Some statutes apply not only to wild or prairie land but also to cultivated grounds.[11] The purpose of this legislation is to guard against disastrous conflagrations which might be innocently caused by an imprudent landowner.[12]

Such statutes, however, do not apply to ordinary acts of husbandry which are conducted in a lawful and careful manner;[13] or to other acts which a landowner is required to do in performance of a duty prescribed by statute.[14]

Defrauding insurer. Some statutes make it a crime to set or cause to be set a fire to one's property for the purpose of defrauding an insurer.[15]

§ 4. —— Refusing Aid in Extinguishing Fire

The right of fire wardens to call on others to aid in extinguishing fires is considered infra § 15, and compensation of such persons infra § 16.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 5. Defenses

Waiver of a required notice to adjoining landowners of a burning is no defense to a prosecution for a fire set without such notice; nor is it a defense to a prosecution for maliciously burning another's property that defendant believed that he had a right to possession of the land on which the burned property was located.

Under statutes requiring notice of the burning to be given to adjoining landowners, waiver of such notice by such owners is no defense to an indictment for the misdemeanor.[16] On a prosecution for maliciously burning another's property it is no defense that accused believed he had a legal right to the possession of the land on which the burned property was located.[17]

Defenses to criminal prosecutions generally are considered in Criminal Law §§ 38–54.

§ 6. Indictment, Information, or Complaint

The indictment or information must set forth the essential elements of the offense charged.

In accordance with general rules, the indictment or information should contain allegations showing that an offense is being charged.[18] It should charge all the elements of the offense with particularity and clearness,[19] but it need not pursue strictly the language of the statute, if words of equivalent import are employed,[20] and an indictment substantially in the form prescribed by the statute is sufficient.[21]

The use of the word "unlawfully" in the complaint is unnecessary where it is manifest that the statute in its general terms declares an unlawful offense.[22]

Charging grade of offense. The indictment should not charge the offense as of a grade other than that made by the statute.[23]

Variance. In accordance with the general rules pertaining to a variance between the allegations

Fire to defraud insurer
In a prosecution for setting fire to property in order to defraud an insurer thereof, an indictment otherwise in proper form and charging the offense is not bad for failure to name the insurer.—Newman v. State, Ala. App., 9 So.2d 768, certiorari denied, Sup., 9 So.2d 744.

Description of property
(1) The property burned should be described with such particularity that it may be seen from the face of the charge that it is within the language of the statute on which the indictment is based.—Chapman v. Commonwealth, 5 Whart., Pa., 427, 34 Am.D. 565—26 C.J. p 582 note 28.

"Building" or "kindling" fire
Complaint for kindling a fire out of doors during suspension of open season was held not demurrable because charge should have been that of building a fire, since phrases "kindling a fire" and "building a fire" are equivalent.—State v. Merrill, 167 A. 172, 132 Me. 103.
"Felonious" not equivalent to "malicious or willful"
Under a statute as to "willfully and maliciously" setting fire, an indictment charging that defendant "feloniously" set the fire is insufficient, since the words are not synonymous and the word "feloniously" is used to distinguish the various classes of offenses called "felonies" from those called "misdemeanors," and is not intended to be descriptive of any particular offense.—State v. Hyman, 102 A. 231, 116 Me. 419.

21. Ala.—Dean v. State, 197 So. 53, 240 Ala. 8—Newman v. State, App., 9 So.2d 768, certiorari denied, Sup., 9 So.2d 744.

of an indictment and the proof, the proof must correspond to, and be in support of, the material allegations in the indictment or information,[24] and if there is a variance in a material matter there can be no conviction.[25]

§ 7. Evidence

In prosecutions under the various fire statutes the prosecution must establish the essential elements of the offense charged beyond a reasonable doubt.

In accordance with general rules, in a prosecution under the various fire statutes the prosecution must prove all the essential elements of the offense charged[26] beyond a reasonable doubt.[27]

In such prosecutions competent, relevant, and material evidence is admissible, while evidence not competent, relevant, or material is not admissible.[28] Thus accused may introduce competent evidence of any fact which tends to explain or obviate the force of incriminating evidence introduced against him.[29]

§ 8. Trial and Judgment

General rules govern the trial and judgment in prosecutions for wrongful fires.

The rules relating to trials in criminal cases generally, discussed in Criminal Law §§ 927–1417, apply in the trial of prosecutions for wrongful fires. These rules govern with respect to the conduct of the trial,[30] questions of law and fact as for the court or jury,[31] and instructions to the jury.[32]

Judgment. The rules relating to judgments or sentences in criminal cases generally, discussed in Criminal Law §§ 1556–1622, apply in prosecutions for wrongful fires. Accordingly if, in the particular case, the offense is a misdemeanor only, a valid judgment cannot be pronounced on an indictment and verdict charging and finding it as a felony.[33]

II. LIABILITY FOR PENALTY

§ 9. In General

Some of the statutes prohibiting or regulating the setting of fires impose penalties on persons violating their provisions.

Under some statutes setting fire to another's woods, prairie, etc., or to one's own woods, prairie, etc., without giving proper notice thereof to adjoin-

26. Participation by defendant
(1) To justify a conviction, it is necessary to prove that defendant committed the crime.—State v. Sieff, 168 P. 524, 54 Mont. 165.
(2) However, where the distinction between accessaries and principals in the commission of a crime has been done away with, all being tried as principals, it is unnecessary for the state to prove that defendant actually set the fire himself in a prosecution for burning property with intent to defraud an insurer of such property, direct physical participation of defendant in the act being unnecessary.—Newman v. State, Ala. App., 9 So.2d 768, certiorari denied, Sup., 9 So.2d 744.

Intent
(1) Where accused, on his own property, started fire which spread across road to prosecutrix' fence, and there was no evidence that accused intentionally set fire to fence, evidence was insufficient to sustain conviction of willfully setting fire to another's fence.—Barker v. State, Tex.Cr., 157 S.W.2d 896.
(2) Mere proof of setting fire on his own land, which spreads to another's land, without proof of evil intent or negligence, does not show an unlawful act.—Galvin v. Gualala Mill Co., 33 P. 93, 98 Cal. 268.

Malice or willfulness
(1) Where willfulness or malice is an essential ingredient of the offense, it should be shown that the burning was done willfully or maliciously.—Galvin v. Gualala Mill Co., 33 P. 93, 98 Cal. 268—People v. Wilkison, 158 P. 1067, 30 Cal.App. 473.
(2) Malice may be inferred from the nature of the act and from the circumstances accompanying and characterizing it.—State v. Leslie, 115 N.W. 897, 138 Iowa 104, 128 Am. S.R. 160.

Guilt or innocence
The evidence permitting, the guilt or innocence of accused is a question of fact for the jury.—State v. Isensee, 249 N.W. 898, 64 N.D. 1.
Value of the property is not a question for the jury, as the gist of the offense is the malicious burning, without regard to value.—Heron v. State, 22 Fla. 86.

32. Cal.—People v. Wilkison, 158 P. 1067, 30 Cal.App. 473—People v. Doyle, 110 P. 458, 13 Cal.App. 611.

ing landowners, and without taking effectual care to extinguish such fire before it shall reach near or adjoining lands, renders the wrongdoer liable to a penalty at the suit of any one designated therein.[34] Under some of these statutes in reference to burning waste land or forest land, a person is liable to the penalty for permitting fire to escape from his own land, although he does not do so willfully.[35] Under others a landowner is not liable for such penalty where he sets a fire from necessity as where he seeks to subdue a fire by firing against it,[36] or where, in lawfully burning something on his own farm, the fire accidentally escapes to an adjoining farm or woods.[37]

§ 10. Proceedings

The penalty provided by the fire statutes may be recovered in an action of debt. The penalty and actual damages resulting from the wrongful act may sometimes be recovered in one action.

Statutory damages in the nature of a penalty may be recovered in an action of debt.[38] A person entitled to a penalty imposed may sue for it, and also for his actual damages for the wrongful act, in one action.[39]

In an action to recover the penalty, it will not be presumed that safeguards taken by defendant in compliance with the statute were not such as the statute prescribed.[40] Proof which merely raises a suspicion that defendant might have caused fires forbidden in the statute is not sufficient to support a verdict.[41]

Defenses. It is no defense to an action for the penalty under some statutes that the land on which the fire was set out belonged to defendant.[42]

An agreement of one adjoining landowner to waive the required notice will not bar a stranger from recovering the prescribed penalty.[43]

III. CIVIL LIABILITY FOR DAMAGES

§ 11. Right of Action and Defenses

a. Liability or right of action
b. Defenses

a. Liability or Right of Action

Both at common law and under or by reason of statute one who willfully and intentionally sets an unlawful fire has been held civilly liable in damages for the consequences proximately resulting therefrom. Some of the statutes prohibiting or regulating the setting of fires impose liability for resulting damages on one violating their provisions.

At common law, one who willfully and intentionally sets a fire has been held to be responsible for the consequences proximately resulting from it, and civilly liable in damages therefor,[44] and some of the statutes which create a criminal liability for setting certain fires expressly reserve all existing civil remedies in favor of the person injured by such fires.[45]

Even if, prior to the enactment of a criminal statute as to setting of fires, as discussed supra §§ 1–4, the act denounced as criminal did not constitute a tort on which to ground a civil action at com-

Basis for rule
The basis for the rule is the general rule that, where one does an illegal or mischievous act which is likely to prove injurious to others, he is answerable for all the consequences which may directly or naturally result from his conduct.—Bizzell v. Booker, 16 Ark. 308.

45. Ill.—Nall v. Taylor, 156 Ill.App. 145, affirmed 93 N.E. 359, 247 Ill. 580.

mon law for damages, under rules discussed in Actions §§ 11, 12, where such a statute imposes a duty in favor of certain individuals or classes of individuals, as in this instance persons who suffer damages proximately caused by the fire, a civil action will lie for damages proximately resulting from a breach of that duty, regardless of whether the statute does or does not provide for the maintenance of such action.[46]

Where plaintiff, disregarding any element of negligence, seeks to enforce this statutory liability, he must bring his case substantially within the terms, spirit, and intent of the statute.[47] Under some statutes there must have been some willful, affirmative, or intentional act on the part of the wrongdoer in setting the fire or in permitting it to escape;[48] and "willfully," within the meaning of such a statute means with evil intent, legal malice, or bad purpose.[49] Under others, however, the injured party may recover the damages sustained by the unlawful burning, irrespective of the wrongdoer's intent or motive,[50] regardless of his intention to do the particular injury occasioned by the fire, or indeed any injury at all,[51] and under still others the liability for an unlawful burning is absolute, irrespective of the question of care in setting the fire,[52] and regardless of his subsequent care or diligence with relation thereto.[53] However, a person is not liable where the fire is set and guarded in a lawful manner and the damage is caused without any fault on his part.[54]

Liability for obstructing or preventing extinguishment of a fire is considered infra § 15, liability for fires caused by negligence generally is considered in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 72, also 45 C.J. p 850 note 8–p 855 note 92, and liability for fires caused by railroads is considered in the C.J.S. title Railroads §§ 484–546, also 51 C.J. p 1143 note 25–p 1255 note 34.

Back fires. Where a person sets out a fire on a prairie between the dates when such fires are prohibited by statute, he is liable for damage to another's property from a back fire set out by the owner with a view of protecting his property from the original fire, where it appears that the property would have been destroyed by the original fire had

Object of statutes

The object of some of these statutes is "to prevent those prairie fires so disastrous to this state, and make those who set the prairies on fire responsible for all damages done thereby."—Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Dennis, 17 P. 153, 38 Kan. 424, 426.

47. Wash.—Waldy v. Preston Mill Co., 141 P. 192, 80 Wash. 25.

Effect of negligence

"If the act is merely a negligent one, there is no occasion for the application of the statute. In such case the common law affords ample remedy."—Johnston v. Marriage, 86 P. 461, 87 P. 74, 74 Kan. 208, 210—Emerson v. Gardiner, 8 Kan. 452.

Lands within statute

(1) Some statutes apply only to fires set on woodlands.—Mizell v. Branning Mfg. Co., 73 S.E. 802, 158 N.C. 265.

(2) "Woods," as used in some statutes, means various lands in their natural state, as contradistinguished from lands cleared and enclosed for cultivation.—Averitt v. Murrell, 49 N.C. 322.

(3) Instances under other statutes see 26 C.J. p 585 note 82 [e].

Persons within statute

Defendant must be the one who set the fire or caused it to be set, in order to be liable under some statutes.—Sauczcuk v. Frankoski, 124 A. 719, 100 Conn. 700.

What constitutes setting fire

Setting fire to a stack of flax straw in the midst of a stubble field is, in the eyes of the law, a setting fire to the stubble in the fields.—Seckerson v. Sinclair, 140 N.W. 239, 24 N.D. 625, followed in Hawkins v. Sinclair, 140 N.W. 246, 24 N.D. 623, and Burger v. Sinclair, 140 N.W. 246, 24 N.D. 624.

Who entitled to notice

A tenant on land adjoining woods of another has sufficient interest to be entitled to the notice required to be given to adjoining landowners before one sets fire to his own woods.—Pruitt v. Williams, 106 S.W.2d 892, 21 Tenn.App. 171.

Consent of ranger

Statute prohibiting burning of forest material in any county in which there is a warden or ranger during certain months without permission of such warden or ranger does not apply where rangers are sent to superintend the burning and actually take charge thereof, and it has not been customary to issue permits in such circumstances.—Waldy v. Preston Mill Co., 141 P. 192, 80 Wash. 25.

48. N.C.—Mizell v. Branning Mfg. Co., 73 S.E. 802, 158 N.C. 265.

Accidental or unintentional fires

Some statutes do not apply to merely accidental fires.—Mizell v. Branning Mfg. Co., 73 S.E. 802, 158 N.C. 265—26 C.J. p 585 note 83 [b].

Power of legislature

Legislature may make one starting fire on his own premises and suffering it to spread to other property absolutely liable for resulting damage and expense of extinguishing fire.—State v. Phillips, 223 N.W. 912, 176 Minn. 472.

not the back fire been set out.[55] However, an owner is not liable to an adjoining owner for damages to the latter's property by a back fire which the former sets out as a matter of necessity to protect his own property, and which he guards with every proper precaution to prevent it from spreading to other property.[56]

Acts of agent or servant. In accordance with general rules, a principal may be liable for the acts of his agent or servant in setting such a fire,[57] but not where the rule of respondeat superior does not apply,[58] as in the case of an independent contractor.[59]

b. Defenses

To escape liability defendant may and must show a legal excuse or justification if any exists.

To escape liability for a fire set in violation of the statute, defendant may and must show a legal excuse or justification if any exists,[60] as, for example, that the fire alleged to have been wrongful comes within the exceptions of the statute imposing liability.[61] However, it is no defense to an action for the damages sustained by the fire that defendant had been indicted for the offense,[62] that plaintiff had already recovered the penalty imposed by the statute,[63] that the property had been insured [64] and plaintiff had been paid his loss by the insurers,[65] or that he had agreed to sue for their benefit, after being indemnified.[66]

Under statutes requiring notice of fire. Since, in actions for damages under statutes which require notice to be given to adjoining landowners, neighbors, or other persons of the setting of the fire, a failure to comply with the statutory requirement and damage done are the basis of the action, it is no defense that defendant used reasonable care to prevent the spread of the fire after it was set.[67] It is, however, a good defense that the burning was done from necessity,[68] or that plaintiff had waived [69] or had received the required notice,[70] and it is immaterial so far as plaintiff is concerned that such notice was not given to others.[71]

§ 12. Nature, Form, and Election of Remedy

a. Nature and form of action
b. Election of remedy

a. Nature and Form of Action

An action for damages from a wrongful fire is one in tort.

An action for damages resulting from a wrongful fire is one in tort,[72] the form of the action at common law being trespass [73] or trespass on the case,[74] as the case may be.

b. Election of Remedy

The injured party need not elect between his remedy under the statute or under the common law.

The statutes imposing a special liability for the wrongful setting out of fires are remedial and cumulative and do not supersede the common-law liability previously existing,[75] and hence a party injured by such fire may seek his remedy either under the statute or under the common law, or may pursue both remedies in the same action,[76] and under some statutes he may sue in one action for the actual damages sustained and also for the penalty prescribed by the statute, as discussed supra § 10.

§ 13. Actions

a. Who may sue or parties
b. Pleading
c. Evidence
d. Trial

a. Who May Sue or Parties

Ordinarily only the owner of the damaged property may sue, provided, under some statutes, he is an adjoining landowner.

An action for the damages sustained must be brought by, or in the name of, the owner of the property damaged,[77] although he need not be the owner of the freehold.[78]

Some statutes give this right of action to adjoining landowners only, and hence the statutory action cannot be maintained by one who is damaged by fire started on land which is not adjoining his,[79] although, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 190, also 25 C.J. p 587 note 18, if the complaint alleges that defendant willfully permitted the fire to spread over and burn plaintiff's property, it in effect alleges negligence, and may be sustained as a common-law action for negligence.

b. Pleading

General rules of pleading control in actions for damages arising out of a wrongful fire. The allegations must bring the case within the statute when the action is based on a breach of a statutory duty.

Plaintiff's declaration, complaint, or petition must comply with the usual requirements,[80] as discussed in the C.J.S. title Pleading §§ 63–98, also 49 C.J. p 128 note 30–p 179 note 56, and when recovery is sought for breach of the statutory duty, as distinguished from a common-law duty, his pleading must bring the case within the statute.[81]

A pleading founded on common-law negligence alone cannot be considered as stating the statutory cause of action;[82] but the fact that the pleading unnecessarily charges negligence is not determinative of the nature of the action as being at common law.[83] Where, however, negligence is the gist of the action, no application of the statutory remedy is necessary.[84]

The pleading may be broad enough to cover both an action arising under the statute and one at common law,[85] or it may be sufficient to cover only one of such causes of action and not the other.[86] Under some statutes the persons injured may claim both actual and statutory damages in one proceeding.[87]

Matters of excuse or justification must be specially pleaded and cannot be set up on a general denial.[88]

That the fire unlawfully set out was not the proximate cause of the injury for which damages are asked may be set up as a defense.[89]

Fire to defraud insurer
Where compromise settlement was effected between insured and insurer, failure of insurer suing for defendants' fraudulent conduct in destroying insured property by fire to allege that it relied on any false representations or concealments in paying loss and failure to prove that it had no knowledge, at time of payment, of incendiary origin of fire, did not authorize directed verdict for defendants or require submission of such questions to jury, since insurer had right to rely on statements in proof of loss that fire was of unknown origin, and it being assumed that it did rely thereon.—Hanover Fire Ins. Co. of New York v. Furkas, 255 N.W. 381, 267 Mich. 14.

Breach of duty
Declaration, which states facts from which the law raises a duty, and which shows an omission of duty on defendant's part, resulting in injury, states a cause of action, although it is based on a statute punishing any person willfully or negligently setting a fire, regardless of the proper construction of the statute.—Nall v. Taylor, 93 N.E. 359, 247 Ill. 580.

87. Miss.—Gloster Lumber Co. v. Wilkinson, 79 So. 96, 118 Miss. 289—Gilchrist-Fordney Co. v. Parker, 69 So. 290, 109 Miss. 445.

89. Iowa.—Ellsworth v. Ellingson, 64 N.W. 774, 96 Iowa 154.

Issues, proof, and variance. Applying the general rules, it has been held that a complaint, which alleges that a fire was set to prairie land by defendant, his servant, or agent, raises the issue whether the servant who set the fire was the agent of defendant,[90] and whether such agent was acting within the scope of his authority.[91]

A general denial, in an action for damages for a malicious burning, does not admit evidence of the general good character of defendant.[92]

c. Evidence

Plaintiff must prove every material element of the offense and its connection with the loss sustained by proper and sufficient evidence.

Plaintiff must prove every material fact necessary to constitute the offense and to connect it with the loss sustained.[93] Under some statutes plaintiff need only prove that defendant set the fire which caused the injury, and if the latter has any excuse or justification for the act he must prove its existence.[94]

Where defendant admits that he set the fire without giving the statutory notice, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, the law presumes that he set it willfully.[95]

Admissibility. The general rules governing the admissibility of evidence in civil cases apply in an action for damages caused by willfully or maliciously setting fires, etc.[96] Evidence tending to show the malice or intent of defendant is admissible.[97]

Weight and sufficiency. In order that plaintiff may recover damages sustained, the evidence produced must be sufficient to show the offense alleged and the damages sustained thereby.[98]

Where an action is founded on the commission of an act denounced as a crime, the proof of the charge must be clear and strong, but it need be no clearer and no stronger than is sufficient reasonably to satisfy the jury, as in other civil cases, of the truth of the charge made,[99] it not being necessary that proof be so clear and strong as to convince the jury beyond a reasonable doubt.[1]

d. Trial

The trial in actions for damages resulting from a wrongful fire is governed by general rules. Thus questions of fact are ordinarily for the jury, and the case should be submitted to the jury under proper instructions.

In accordance with general rules governing the trial of civil actions, questions of fact in actions for damages resulting from fires ordinarily should be determined by the jury,[2] and where the evidence is conflicting or doubtful, it should be submitted to the jury and not be disposed of by the court alone as by an affirmative charge.[3] Thus it is generally

Direction of verdict
In an action for damages for the willful burning of a house in which plaintiffs had property, evidence that defendant had refused to allow the rescue of plaintiffs' property was a question of fact for the jury as to whether defendant did or did not intentionally start the fire,[4] whether his act in starting a fire close to plaintiff's land was willful,[5] whether defendant did or did not start the fire, within the meaning of the statute,[6] whether a fire started by defendant did the damage,[7] whether defendant used reasonable endeavors to prevent a loss,[8] whether the land on which the fire was set out is of the character required by the statute,[9] or whether the person who set the fire was the authorized agent of defendant and was acting within the scope of his employment.[10]

Instructions. The rules relating to instructions in civil cases generally, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Trial §§ 266–488, also 64 C.J. p 510 note 3–p 1008 note 15–199, control in actions for damages resulting from a wrongful fire.[11]

Verdict. Under some statutes the jury, under proper instructions, may award treble damages in a general verdict, or the trial court may require the jury to return a verdict on actual damages and a special finding on malice, and thereupon award treble damages.[12]

§ 14. Damages

Plaintiff generally can recover only the loss actually sustained by reason of the fire and proximately caused thereby.

As a general rule, the damages recoverable consist of, and are confined to, the loss actually sustained by plaintiff by reason of the fire,[13] and proximately caused thereby,[14] and which by reasonable endeavor and expense plaintiff could not prevent.[15]

In the absence of a permissory statute, it has been held that exemplary damages are not recoverable,[16] but under some statutes double or treble damages are recoverable.[17]

The fact that the destroyed property was insured does not affect the amount of damages recoverable.[18]

Elements of damages. Under some statutes plaintiff is entitled to recover all expenses incurred in fighting the fire as an element of damage,[19] although under others voluntary services rendered by plaintiff in putting out the fire are not so recoverable.[20]

An attorney's fees are not an element of the damages in such cases.[21]

Interest on the value of the property from the time it was destroyed may be allowed as part of the damages.[22]

IV. EXTINGUISHMENT OF FIRES

§ 15. In General

Various statutes impose a duty on persons responsible for an uncontrolled fire to report, or make reasonable effort to extinguish it. Fire officials are sometimes authorized to call on designated persons to aid in extinguishing fires.

Statutes in some jurisdictions impose a duty on persons responsible for uncontrolled fires on forest lands to make reasonable effort to control or extinguish such fires, and give authority to foresters or fire wardens or rangers so to do on failure of such persons to act.[23] This duty is sometimes imposed on the person on whose property the fire exists or from which it spreads.[24] Other statutes impose a duty on persons owning land in the vicinity of a forest area to report an uncontrolled or unauthorized fire on such land to designated officials.[25]

Failure of one setting a fire in designated areas to extinguish the same or to make reasonable effort so to do is made an offense by some statutes.[26]

Assistance in fighting fires. Under some statutes the fire warden or other fire official may call on designated persons to aid in extinguishing a fire.[27]

Obstructing or preventing extinguishment. Since, as discussed in the C.J.S. title Negligence § 72, also 26 C.J. p 584 note 68, one, who by his negligence obstructs or interferes with a lawful attempt to extinguish a dangerous fire, is liable for the damages which otherwise might have been prevented, a fortiori, he is liable in such a case where his interference or obstruction was malicious, unlawful, wanton, or willful,[28] if such interference or obstruction was the proximate cause of the injury.[29]

§ 16. Compensation and Expenses

Violators of regulatory provisions of fire statutes are frequently made liable for the expenses of fighting and extinguishing unlawful fires. Persons lawfully called on to assist in extinguishing fires are entitled to compensation in accordance with the statutory provision therefor.

Statutes frequently impose liability on persons violating the regulatory provisions of the fire statutes for the expense of fighting and extinguishing unlawful fires.[30] Some of the statutes make per-

26. Power of legislature
(1) Respecting validity of statutes punishing anyone accidentally setting fire and not using every possible effort to extinguish it, legislature was authorized to exact higher degree of care than standard conduct of reasonably prudent person.—Sullivan v. Mountain States Power Co., 9 P.2d 1038, 139 Or. 282.
(2) Congress has been held to have power to require one building fire in or near timber or inflammable material on public domain to extinguish it.—U. S. v. Alford, Fla., 47 S. Ct. 597, 274 U.S. 264, 71 L.Ed. 1040.
Every "possible" effort
Statute punishing anyone accidentally setting fire and failing to use every "possible" effort to extinguish it requires nothing but what is practicable and reasonable.—Sullivan v. Mountain States Power Co., 9 P.2d 1038, 139 Or. 282.
Fire built outside public domain

Application of statute to power company

Legislature has power to impose such liability.—State v. Phillips, 223 N.W. 912, 176 Minn. 472.
Construction of statute
The language of the section of Virginia statute respecting liability of a person for expenses incurred in fighting a fire caused by such person's negligence may not be construed contrary to its obvious meaning in order to make it uniform with other provisions of the Forestry Act of 1926.—U. S. v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., C.C.A.Va., 130 F.2d 308.
Who may recover
Under Virginia statute respecting liability of a person for expenses incurred in fighting a fire caused by such person, mere fact that a method of procedure was provided for the putting out of fires and recovery of proper expenses in doing so by state officials only does not nullify provision of statute that the negligent party shall be liable for amount of expenses incurred in fighting the fire, but means that the negligent party shall be liable for all expenses incurred in fighting the fire by anyone who is justified in fighting it.—U. S. v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., supra.
Sufficiency of complaint

Steps taken to fight fire

sons responsible for uncontrolled fires on forest land which they fail to control or extinguish liable for the cost of so doing by foresters, fire wardens, or rangers.[31]

Under statutes authorizing fire wardens or rangers to call on persons within the town or district to aid in extinguishing a fire in fields or woods, a person who renders such assistance or who has been ordered to the place of the fire may receive compensation for his services;[32] but a person is not entitled to such compensation where he renders his services voluntarily,[33] or where he renders his services at the instance of one who has no authority to order such assistance.[34]

V. INVESTIGATION OF ORIGIN OF FIRES

§ 17. In General

Statutes sometimes provide for the investigation of the origin of fires by designated officials.

Under some statutes certain officers, such as the fire marshal, state police, or insurance commissioner, may investigate the origin of fires.[35] Since such a statute is enacted to promote freedom of examination in the public interest, it should be liberally construed.[36]

A statutory provision for a tax on the business of insurance companies to raise a fund for expenses in investigating the source of and preventing fires is a valid exercise of the police power.[37]

31. U.S.—U. S. v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., supra.

Validity of statute

(1) Such statutes have been upheld as valid.—U. S. v. First State Bank of Thompson Falls, D.C.Mont., 17 F. Supp. 162, reversed on other grounds, C.C.A., First State Bank of Thompson Falls v. U. S., 92 F.2d 132.

(2) That reasonable cost of fighting forest fire starting on land might exceed land's value was held not to render statute giving lien on land therefor unconstitutional.—State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 201, 122 Or. 323, followed in State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 203, 122 Or. 330.

Liability of city

(1) City comes within statute making "any person, firm, or corporation" liable.—State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 201, 122 Or. 323, followed in State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 203, 22 Or. 330.

(2) Capacity of city in ownership of land as governmental or otherwise is held immaterial.—State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 201, 122 Or. 323, followed in State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 203, 22 Or. 330.

Liability as between vendor and vendee

(1) Where the theory of liability is failure of one owning land to make reasonable effort to control or extinguish fire, the fact that the vendor reserved merchantable timber on the land at the time of the purchase of the land does not excuse the vendee from liability.—State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 201, 122 Or. 323, followed in State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 203, 22 Or. 330.

(2) Under a statute rendering liable the person "on whose property such fire exists," a vendor, possessing but the bare legal title under an executory contract to sell under which the purchaser has the right to possession, is not liable, such statute being intended to place responsibility of guarding against fire on person whose ownership includes right of possession since he is the person presumably nearest the fire contemplated by the statute.—First State Bank of Thompson Falls v. U. S., C.C.A.Mont., 92 F.2d 132, reversing, D.C., U. S. v. First State Bank of Thompson Falls, 17 F.Supp. 162.

Extent of liability

Liability extends as well to cost of extinguishing fire on defendant's land as to the land to which fire spread by reason of defendant's failure to act.—State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 201, 122 Or. 323, followed in State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 203, 22 Or. 330.

Actions

Where statute provides that the action be brought in name of the state, thus obviating danger that defendant might have to pay twice, evidence that state paid money for controlling or extinguishing forest fire was held not necessary for recovery therefor against owner of land.—State v. City of Marshfield, 259 P. 201, 122 Or. 323, followed in State of City of Marshfield, 259 P. 203, 22 Or. 330.

32. N.Y.—Matter of Stokes, 68 N. Y.S. 439, 33 Misc. 448—Baker v. Warren County, 11 Pa.Super. 170.

Liability of state

When men are called on to work in putting out fires, at request of state forest ranger under statute making such service compulsory, conservation commission must allow them some compensation, and, if commission refuses to pay, state is liable to compensate men for reasonable value of their work up to maximum limit of statute.—Rosenbluth v. State, 269 N.W. 292, 222 Wis. 623.

United States

Where a national forest in Virginia was endangered by approach of a rapidly spreading fire allegedly caused by defendant railroad's negligence, the United States was not a "volunteer" when it took steps to prevent destruction of forest, as respects its right to recover from defendant for expenses incurred in extinguishing fire, it being immaterial that no one had requested the United States to take steps to protect.—U. S. v. Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co., C.C.A. Va., 130 F.2d 308.

37. Tenn.—Rhinehart v. State, supra.

§ 18. Powers and Proceedings

An investigation may be instituted whenever a fire occurs, and the investigating official generally has power to summon witnesses and administer oaths.

The occurrence of a fire within the territorial limits of the community over which the fire marshal or other officer has jurisdiction is sufficient to justify and authorize an investigation into its origin and circumstances.[38] A complaint is not necessary to call into action his power to proceed.[39]

The statutes generally empower the fire marshal or commissioner to compel the attendance of witnesses and administer oaths.[40]

Under some statutes the testimony taken at the investigation cannot be used in a criminal proceeding [41] against the person giving such testimony,[42] and under others, neither the result of the investigation nor statements made by an insurance company or its officers and agents, or insured or his representatives, at the investigation can be admitted in evidence in, or made the basis of, any civil action for damages.[43]

FIREWOOD. Wood suitable for fuel, not including standing or felled timber which is suitable and valuable for other purposes.[1]

FIREWORKS. Contrivances of inflammable and explosive materials combined in various proportions for the purpose of producing in combustion beautiful or amusing scenic effects, or to be used as a night signal on land or sea or for various purposes in war.[2] Not classified as an "explosive" see Explosives § 1. Civil liability for injuries caused by unlawful discharge see Explosives § 10. As constituting a nuisance see the C.J.S. title Nuisances § 75, also 46 C.J. p 707 notes 47–55.

FIRKIN. A measure of capacity, equal to nine gallons. The word is also used to designate a weight, used for butter and cheese, of fifty-six pounds avoirdupois.[3]

FIRLOT. A Scotch measure of capacity, containing two gallons and a pint.[4]

FIRM. As a noun, the term is defined in the C.J. S. title Partnership § 1, also 47 C.J. p 647 notes 1–5. It is said to be a conventional term applicable only to the persons who, on each particular occasion when the name is used, are members of the firm.[5]

As an adjective, fixed in character; stable; enduring; established; steadfast; stanch; as firm credit, firm prices, a firm friend, a firm conviction.[6]

38. N.Y.—Harris v. People, 64 N.Y. 148.

Place of investigation

Under a statute authorizing the insurance commissioner to investigate the origin of fires, such investigation may take place at the commissioner's office in the state capitol, although the fire under investigation occurred in another county.—Rhinehart v. State, 117 S.W. 508, 121 Tenn. 420, 17 Ann.Cas. 254.

Power to issue subpœnas

A statute vesting in the insurance commissioner or his deputy all the powers of a trial justice for the purpose of compelling attendance of witnesses to testify in investigations of the origin of fire, and another statute, providing that "the magistrate before whom an information is made may issue subpœnas to any part of the state for witnesses," authorizes the insurance commissioner, in such investigations, to issue subpœnas for bringing before him witnesses from any part of the state.—Rhinehart v. State, supra.

Confinement of witness

Statutes conferring on state fire marshal or deputy power to separate witnesses and prevent their communication did not authorize marshal or deputy to detain witness in custody and confine him in order to prevent communication.—Geldon v. Finnegan, 252 N.W. 369, 213 Wis. 539.

41. N.Y.—People v. Klein, 173 N.Y. S. 108, 185 App.Div. 86, distinguishing People v. Schneider, 139 N.Y.S. 104, 154 App.Div. 203.

"Firm bid," defined as meaning an

FIRMA. In old English law, the contract of lease or letting; also the rent, or farm, reserved upon a lease of lands, which was frequently payable in provisions, but sometimes in money, in which latter case it was called "alba firma," white rent.[7] Other meanings were a messuage with the house, garden, or lands, etc., connected therewith; also a banquet, or supper; provisions for the table, hence a tribute or custom paid toward entertaining the king for one night.[8]

In Spanish law, a signature, hence a firm, as used with reference to partnership.[9] In a different sense, a proceeding under the law of Aragón, by which one possessing property or rights was maintained therein; also the order for such maintenance.[10]

FIRMAN. A Turkish word denoting a decree or grant of privileges, or passport to a traveler; a passport granted by the Great Mogul to captains of foreign vessels to trade within the territories over which he has jurisdiction; a permit.[11]

FIRMARATIO. The right of a tenant to his lands and tenements.[12]

FIRMARIUM. In old records, a place in monasteries, and elsewhere, where the poor were received and supplied with food; hence, the word "infirmary."[13]

FIRMARIUS. In old English and Scotch law, a lessee for a term; one having a term, ferm, or farm in lands;[14] a fermor; a lessee of a term.[15]

FIRMATIO. The doe season; also a supplying with food.[16]

FIRME. In old records, a farm.[17]

FIRMIOR ET POTENTIOR EST OPERATIO LEGIS QUAM DISPOSITIO HOMINIS.[18]

FIRMITAS. In old English law, an assurance of some privilege, by deed or charter.[19]

FIRMLY. In a firm manner.[20] Comprised in the term "faithfully" see 35 C.J.S. p 491 note 16, and held equivalent to "verily."[21]

FIRMURA. In old English law, liberty to scour and repair a mill-dam, and carry away the soil, etc.[22]

FIRST. Being before all others; being the initial unit or aggregate in order of occurrence or arrangement as to time, place, or rank;[23] preceding all others; first in time or a series, position, or rank; earliest in time or succession; foremost in position; in front of, or in advance of, all others; foremost in rank, importance, or worth.[24] The term has been contrasted with "at the same moment," "coincident with,"[25] "second," and "subordinate."[26]

First floor. A term equivalent to "first story" of the building,[27] and it naturally includes the walls,[28] but not the water pipes above the ceiling.[29] The term has been distinguished from "room."[30]

First in, first out, rule. The equitable doctrine that, in case of payments by a debtor to his creditor on distinct transactions and for different amounts, when neither party makes an appropriation at the time, the payments are applied by law to the liabilities of earliest date.[31] The term has also been applied to the commingling of trust funds and personal funds in the same account, the rule attributing the first drawing out to the first payment in,[32] and to the identification of shares, or of lots or parcels of property, where sales are made from the mingled shares, or combined lots or parcels, having different costs, the rule presuming, in determining the gain from each transaction, that the share or lot first sold is the share or lot first bought.[33] For application of the rule, and the principle involved, see the C.J.S. titles Internal Revenue, Payment § 72, also 48 C.J. p 657 note 3–p 659 note 19, and Trusts § 438, also 65 C.J. p 977 note 5–p 978 note 10.

First purchaser. A purchaser who first acquired the estate, through his family, whether it was transferred to him by sale or by gift, or by any other method, except only that of descent.[34]

FISC. An Anglicized form of the Latin "fiscus,"[42] and defined as meaning a treasury of a kingdom or a state; money chest.[43]

FISCAL.

As a Noun

A financial secretary or minister;[44] a treasurer;[45] a procurator fiscal; a public law officer.[46]

In Spanish law, it is sometimes used as in English to denote that which pertains to the "fisco" or public treasury; more commonly, however, it means a public attorney, or public prosecutor, and corresponds generally to a district, or prosecuting attorney; and sometimes to an attorney general.[47]

As an Adjective

Financial, pertaining to finance;[48] relating to accounts or the management of revenue;[49] of or pertaining to the treasury or public finances of a government.[50] The term imports some relation to financial operations,[51] and has been held synonymous with "financial" see Financial 36 C.J.S. p 765 note 24. For references to specific uses see 26 C.J. p 592 note 98.

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[52] For other phrases as to which more recent adjudications have not been found see 26 C.J. p 592 text and notes 4–11.

FISCO. In Spanish law, the department of the government which collects, receives, and pays money;[53] the public treasury. It is regarded in law as a person and, in seeking restitution of rights, it has been given the status of a minor; and various other rights and privileges have been extended to it.[54]

FISCUS. In Roman law, the treasury of the prince or emperor, as distinguished from "ærarium," which was the treasury of the state;[55] also the treasury or property of the state, as distinguished from the private property of the sovereign.[56] From this term is derived the word "confiscate," that is, to appropriate to the fiscus or fisc.[57]

In English law, the king's treasury, as the repository of forfeited property; the treasury of a noble, or of any private person.[58]

FISH. As a noun, used to designate an aquatic animal see Fish § 1. In well-drilling, an object which has to be removed from a well which is being drilled.[59]

As a verb employed in the participial form as taking fish by angling or drawing a net see Fish § 1. Used in the sense of seeking information in a pending action, "fishing" has been defined as meaning ordering a party to a suit to produce all of his books and papers for examination by the other party.[60]

I. IN GENERAL

§ 1. Meaning of Terms

The word "fish" in its broadest sense is a designation of almost any exclusively aquatic animal.

"Fish," in its broadest sense, is a designation of almost any exclusively aquatic animal, vertebrate, or invertebrate.[1] The term "fish" includes in itself oysters, clams, and other shell fish,[2] and has also been held to be included in the term "game."[3] The term "agricultural products" does not include fish.[4]

Fish are classified in the law, largely perhaps because of their migratory characteristics and want of a fixed habitat, as animals ferae naturae.[5]

A "fishery" is the right to take fish at a certain place, or in particular waters;[6] a right to employ within a particular stretch of water lawful means for the taking of fish which may be found there;[7] a place for catching fish or other sea products;[8] and it is the exclusive right which every owner of land on the shore of a river has to use his own property for the purpose of drawing a seine, or practicing any other device for the catching of fish.[9] The term is also used to designate a place prepared for catching fish with nets or hooks, and in common parlance is applied to a place where a seine or net is drawn.[10] It has also been defined as the act, process, or occupation of taking fish or other sea products.[11]

Although a fishery is in the water, the use of the space on shore between high and low watermarks may be necessary in the use of the fishery, and may be included in the term "fishery,"[12] a fishery is to be distinguished from a fishing place, or the right to use a particular shore or beach as a basis for carrying on the business; the latter is always vested in the shore owner and is entirely distinct from the right to fish from the water.[13]

As a right of property a fishery is real, and not personal, property; it is a part of the soil and not an entity having an independent existence,[14] and, as far as it is exercised on another's land, it is a profit à prendre.[15] Hence, it cannot be claimed by way of easement,[16] and a person fishing by claim of common right can be in no sense the owner of a fishery.[17]

A several fishery is the exclusive right of fishing which is derived from the ownership of the soil;[18] the exclusive right to fish in one's own waters.[19] It is a fishery by which the party claiming it has the right of fishing independently of all others, so that no person can have a coextensive right with him in the object claimed.[20] As to whether the ownership of the soil under the water is essential to a several fishery there is a diversity of opinion, some authorities holding that it is [21] and others that it is not.[22]

A common fishery is a public or common right to fish in certain waters, and is or may be exclusive of the ownership of the soil;[23] it may be a right of fishing in another man's waters in common with certain other persons.[24] A free fishery is an exclusive privilege, derived from royal or public grant to fish in public waters, and is independent of the soil.[25] Under the common law there is a free right of fishery, which is common to all citizens of the state, extending to all rivers where the tide ebbs and flows, as well as in the sea.[26] The right of fishery in navigable rivers and arms of the sea is presumptively free.[27]

"Royal fishery" is a term which was applied at common law to the right of fishery, by virtue of the king's prerogative, in a royal or navigable river as far as the sea ebbed and flowed in it.[28]

Fishing. To be employed in taking fish as by angling or drawing a net; a pursuit consisting, not of a single act, but of many acts, according to the nature of the fishing. It is not the isolated act alone either of surrounding the fish by the net, or of taking them out of the water and obtaining manual custody of them; it is a continuous process beginning from the time when the preliminary preparations are being made for the taking of the fish and extending down to the moment when they are finally reduced to actual and certain possession.[29]

Fishing banks. A fishing bank is a fishing ground of comparatively shoal water in the sea.[30]

Fishing implements. "Fishing implement" is a term which has been construed to include the use of lines, seines, spears, nets, and any of the ordinary and usual modes of catching fish in rivers or bays.[31]

A dummy trap is a sham trap, not used for fishing, but designed simply to squat on and hold a trap location.[32] A fish trap is included in the term "personal property."[33]

Fish pots are contrivances in the nature of screens and traps, placed at the junction of low dams or walls extending out from each shore and somewhat down stream, in such a way as to collect the water and send it through the pot, so that fish may be screened out there.[34]

Fishing lines may be classed as hand lines and set lines, long lines, or trawls.[35] A set line is a line with baited hooks fastened to it, set or anc ored for taking fish; a line to which a number baited hooks are attached, and which, supported b a buoy, is extended on the surface of the water.[3

A "net" is an instrument for catching fis formed with twine or thread wrought or woven i meshes.[37] A gill net is a flat net so suspended in th water that its meshes allow the heads of fish to pas but catch in the gills when they seek to extricat themselves; a net which catches fish by the gills.[3 A pod net is a species of fishing net also calle "Dutch net."[39] A "set-net" is any net that is o may be set in a desired position;[40] it may consist o several nets fastened together.[41] A "set net" ha also been defined as one fastened at one end or a both ends, so the whole net cannot drift with th current, and, notwithstanding this, be in a conditio to take fish.[42] A "drift net" is a net with both end free to drift with the current.[43] A wing net is fishing net consisting of netting stretched ove hoops somewhat similar to barrel hoops, the firs of which is about thirty inches in diameter, an the succeeding hoops greatly decreasing in size about twelve feet in length and a wing about fiv feet long on each side, one end of the net bein attached to the shore, mouth upstream.[44] A "fyke' is a fish trap consisting of several successive conical nets with wide-stretched mouths.[45] A hoop o

Consummation not essential
"This involves a definition of fishing, and in the light of our personal experience, extended over half a century, we define it to be a human effort, successful or unsuccessful, by any device, to remove from the water the piscatorial denizen thereof, a performance demanding patience, involving skill, accompanied by profanity and usually followed by mendacity. The operation begins the moment that the device, for example, a hook or net, enters the water, continues all the time it is in the water, and is consummated when it brings the denizen from the water. The consummation is not essential to the definition at all, for the operator is fishing when he drops the hook or places the net in the water, fishing while he leaves the device in the water, and still fishing when he pulls it out, regardless of results."—Commonwealth v. Its meshes are made of a proper size to permit the head of the fish to pass through beyond the gills, which prevents the fish from withdrawing it, and it is thereby trapped and captured. While fishermen might be expected to distinguish betweer seines and gill nets, and pound o pond nets, calling each by its dis tinguishing name, if all might no be called by the generic name o seines, certainly the gill net is a species of trap net."—Hilborn v Smith, 111 N.W. 1082, 1083, 148 Mich 474.

barrel net is not a trammel net.[46]

A seine is a kind of net used for taking fish, one of the class of encircling nets, consisting of floats at the upper edge and with leads of greater or less weight at the lower, and used to inclose a certain area of water, and, by bringing the nets together, either in a boat or on the shore, to secure the fish that may be inclosed.[47]

Fishing place. As defined by statute a fishing place is the place or places where seines or nets have been usually thrown into the water to the place or places where they have been usually taken out, or from the place or places where they may be hereafter thrown into the water to the place or places where they may be taken out;[48] it applies only to shore fisheries.[49]

Fishway. As contemplated by some statutes, a fishway means that, where there is an obstruction in the stream which prevents the fish from going up or down the stream, an artificial means is afforded to the fish to pass the obstruction.[50]

Kinds of fish. Royal or regal fish include whales, porpoises, and sturgion.[51] Scientifically speaking, a whale is not a fish, but in popular concept, a whale is deemed a fish.[52]

A "shellfish" is a fish covered with a shell;[53] any aquatic animal whose external covering consists of a shell, either testacious, as in oysters, clams, and other mollusks, or crustacious, as in lobsters or crabs. The term is chiefly applied, in commerce, to crabs, lobsters, and crayfish, oysters, mussels, periwinkles, and whelks.[54] Escallops are mollusks of the species pectinidae.[55] A mussel is any of certain marine bivalve mollusks of the genus Mytilus and related genera.[56]

Mackerel is an important scombroid fish of the North Atlantic; with or without a qualifying word applied to various fishes of the family Scombridae.[57] It seems that the word "mackerel" in the fish trade has a trade meaning, which is clear mackerel, not rusty mackerel.[58]

A "game fish" is any fish the capture of which requires skill and affords sport.[59] A soft fish is one that is not a game fish.[60]

In its common and ordinary meaning, "trout" is a word employed to designate a kind of fresh water fish, or fish which at least breed and ordinarily live in fresh water, even though they may sometimes escape to the salt water when they have an opportunity.[61]

Piscaria. All fisheries, without regard to their distinctive character, or to the method of taking fish.[62]

Private pond. In the common-law sense, a body of water wholly on the lands of a single owner, or of a single group of joint owners or tenants in common, which does not have such connection with any public waters that fish can pass from one to the other.[63]

Private preserve under some statutes is a natural pond, of not more than twenty acres, belonging to a common owner, or any artificial pond made solely for the purpose of fish culture.[64]

§ 2. Property in Fish in General

As long as fish are not reduced to possession, they belong to the state as representative and for the benefit of all the people.

Fish, as long as they remain unconfined in their natural element and are not taken and reduced to possession, are not the subject of private property, but are public property;[65] and not even the owner of the soil over which a stream frequented by fish flows owns the fish therein.[66] Likewise, the fact that a particular person is engaged in the business of taking fish does not give him any property in the fish prior to taking.[67] While they are in a state of freedom fish are the property of the sovereign power, in Great Britain, of the king;[68] and in the United States, of the state, in whose waters they may be, not as a proprietor, but in its sovereign capacity, as the representative and for the benefit of all its people in common,[69] and the ownership thereof cannot be claimed by any particular individual.[70] On the other hand, except by legal fiction, a state, strictly speaking, does not have a proprietary right in the fish in its streams.[71] The distinction between royal fish, which include whales, porpoises, and sturgeon, and other fish is that title to and the right to take royal fish was held by the sovereign for his own revenue, but, as far as concerned other fish not royal and in tide waters, was in the king in trust for all his subjects.[72]

When a fish has been legally appropriated and reduced to possession, it ceases to be a wild animal in the legal sense.[73] Accordingly, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, an individual may acquire a qualified property in fish by so confining them within his immediate power as to prevent their escape and the use of their natural liberty,[74] as where

Not absolute property
Fish in public waters were not absolute property of the state, and hence a statute forbidding fishing in the Ochlockonee River between a designated highway bridge and the dam of a particular water power corporation did not relate to state property within rule that constitutional provision requiring notice of local laws to be given in locality affected was not applicable to laws relating to state property.—State ex rel. they are confined in private lakes or ponds,[75] or taken with nets or other means so that they cannot escape.[76] The mere fact that a person owns land surrounding water in which there are fish gives him no property in the fish, unless the water is so inclosed as to be absolutely within his control, and the free passage of fish to and from it is entirely and rightfully obstructed.[77] While such a qualified property exists in them, the fish are as much under the protection of the law as if they were the absolute and indefeasible property of the owner, and an action will lie against anyone who unlawfully takes or destroys them.[78] If, however, fish escape after being confined, and are found at large in their proper element, they again become public property and subject to appropriation by the first person who takes them.[79]

Usages or customs prevailing among those engaged in taking fish, and regulating conflicting rights with respect to the catch, if valid, will be recognized by the courts.[80]

§ 3. Rights of Property and Contracts as to Fish Illegally Taken

One who catches fish in violation of law has no ownership or right to possession of the fish.

Since fish in public waters are the property of the state held in trust for the people, see supra § 2, such fish can become the subject of private ownership only in such qualified way, to such limited extent, and subject to such conditions and limitations as the state through its legislature may see fit to provide and impose.[81] One who catches fish in violation of law has no ownership in, or right to possession of, the fish.[82] Title to fish taken by a trespasser has been held, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, to be in the owner of the land.[83]

II. RIGHT OF FISHING

A. IN PRIVATE WATERS

§ 4. By Owner

The right of fishing in waters on lands owned by a private individual, as a general rule, is exclusively in such owner.

As a general rule the right of fishing in waters on land owned by a private individual is exclusively in such owner,[84] and, where such ownership is established, the right may attach to an arm of the Property of state

Fish in a trap operated illegally during closed season belong to state, and, where defendant pleaded guilty to illegally operating a fish trap, the court improperly refused to order payment to the state of the proceeds of a sale of the fish taken from the trap.—State v. Cramer, 8 P.2d 1004, 167 Wash. 159.

To vest title in taker
While there is no unqualified ownership of fish until they have been caught and reduced to possession, they must be lawfully taken to vest title in the taker.—Gratz v. McKee, C.C.A.Mo., 270 F. 713, reversing 258 F. 335, 169 C.C.A. 351, certiorari granted 41 S.Ct. 535, 256 U.S. 687, 65 L.Ed. 1172, and affirmed 43 S.Ct. 16, 260 U.S. 127, 67 L.Ed. 167.

Navigable stream
The public has no right to fish on a navigable river, the soil under which is privately owned, but such rights are exclusively in such owner. A statute, setting aside the submerged and swamp lands belonging to the state in Kalamazoo River and other waters for a public fishing and hunting ground, has no application, where the land between meander line and middle thread of stream is privately owned.—Sewers v. Hacklander, 188 N.W. 547, 219 Mich. 143.

Submerged land
Owner of fee in soil acquired before waters submerged it was entitled to exclusive fishing rights sea, where the tide ebbs and flows.[85] In accordance with this rule, the owners of land on the banks of a nonnavigable stream ordinarily have the exclusive right of fishing opposite their respective lands to the middle of the stream, and, if the lands on both sides of the stream belong to the same person, he has the same exclusive right of fishing in the whole stream, as far as his lands extend along it.[86] Although there is a general right in the public to fish in public streams and waters, see infra § 6, this does not permit a trespass on the lands of another to fish,[87] and, although a person is entitled to fish in a river, that right does not entitle him to fish in waters which are on another's land because of overflows, or which are not a part of the natural channel of the river.[88]

Clearing out a fishing place, whether in navigable or nonnavigable waters, has been held not to give an exclusive right of fishing,[89] although there is authority to the contrary.[90]

An owner's exclusive right of fishery may be lost, or at least restricted, where another shows a right of fishery, in the waters on the owner's land, acquired in some way recognized by law.[91] Although an exclusive right of fishery may be regulated or restricted by the state, see infra § 26, it is not divested or extinguished by a legislative act condemning the land to the use of another for mill purposes, unless the words of the grant conferring the authority to construct the dam plainly indicate that such was the intention of the legislature;[92] nor does the owner lose his fishing rights by making the water navigable for his own purposes.[93]

The manner in which a riparian owner may exercise his exclusive right of fishery is subject to the right of the state to regulate and preserve the fish by statute for the good of the public in general, see infra § 26; and, even in the absence of statute, the right must be exercised in such a manner as not to injure other proprietors above or below on the same stream.[94] He has no right wantonly to injure or destroy the fish passing through water over his Riparian rights as to nonnavigable waters generally see the C.J.S. title Waters §§ 5–12, also 67 C.J. p 682 note 1–p 696 note 35.

No easement
The waters of a concededly nonnavigable river were private, and title of its riparian proprietors extended to thread of river, and hence fisherman, who was drowned when boat capsized near old submerged dam which had been constructed by power company, did not enter on river under an easement enjoyed by the general public, as contended by fisherman's administratrix suing power company for his death.—Millspaugh v. Northern Indiana Public Service Co., 12 N.E.2d 396, 400, 104 Ind.App. 540, citing Corpus Juris.

Qualified property right
"Under the common law as it has existed, and still exists, in England, and generally as transmitted to the states of the Union, modified by statutory enactment and supplemented by usage, the owner of the soil would have a qualified, but substantial, property interest in the fish upon his own land, with the exclusive right to reduce it to possession superior to that of others, and subject only to regulation by the state as a sovereign and under its police powers."—Gratz v. McKee, C.C.A. Mo., 270 F. 713, 718, reversing, 1919, 258 F. 335, 169 C.C.A. 351, certiorari granted 41 S.Ct. 535, 256 U.S. 687, 65 L.Ed. 1172, and affirmed 43 S.Ct. 16, 260 U.S. 127, 67 L.Ed. 167.

land;[95] nor has he the right by means of dams or other artificial obstructions to prevent the passage of fish up and down the stream;[96] and it is generally held that the right to obstruct the free passage of fish cannot be acquired by prescription.[97]

Although a stream above the ebb and flow of the tide is not navigable in a strict technical sense, yet if it is capable of being navigated by boats, rafts, or logs, the exclusive right of fishery of a riparian owner on its banks is subject to the use of the stream as a public highway for purposes of transportation and commercial intercourse.[98]

Small lakes and ponds. The persons owning land bordering on small lakes or ponds have the right to take fish therefrom subject only to the right of the state to regulate and preserve for the public.[99] The right of fishing in a small lake or pond inclosed by the owner's land and having no communication through which fish are accustomed to pass to other waters belongs exclusively to the owner thereof;[1] but it has been held otherwise as to lakes having outlets to other waters through which fish are accustomed to pass.[2] A person who owns land adjacent to a lake or pond which is owned by another is not entitled to take fish in such lake or pond.[3]

Where there are several riparian owners of an inland lake or pond, it has been held that each owner may use the surface of the whole lake or pond for fishing, so far as he does not interfere with the reasonable use of the waters by other riparian owners.[4] Where, however, a person, by specific grant from the state, owns the land under a definite and specific portion of the lake, he has a right to control that part of the surface of the lake above his land, including the right to fish thereon.[5]

§ 5. By Another than Owner of Soil

The right to fish in the waters of another may be acquired by grant or by prescription, but such a right cannot be gained by custom or by public use of the waters for fishing purposes.

The right to take fish in any water which is not navigable, although it belongs prima facie to the owner of the soil,[6] follows the ownership of the water if that is separated from the ownership of the soil.[7] The right of fishing in private waters, and other rights pertaining thereto, may be acquired by grant from the owner of the land over which the waters flow,[8] the extent of the rights conveyed being

The legislature is without power to confer on anyone a right to go on land of another to catch fish in lakes thereon, and a refusal to enjoin landowner's interfering with persons going on his land to fish is proper.—Smith v. Godart, Tex.Civ.App., 295 S.W. 211.

6. Presumption
In absence of some agreement to the contrary, the law presumes that the ownership of soil and the right to fish on waters over soil are vested in the same person.—Millspaugh v. Northern Indiana Public Service Co., 12 N.E.2d 396, 104 Ind.App. 540.

Failure of one grantee to join
Where a grantor signs and acknowledges a contract granting a fishing license to two grantees, and permits it to be recorded, although it contains the signature of only one of the grantees, the grant becomes effective in behalf of the one grantee.—Boyd v. Colgan, 268 P. 794, 126 Kan. 497.

Part payment
Where an owner of land grants the fishing privileges thereon for a term determined by the application of the ordinary rules of construction to the language of the grant.[9] It has been held to be competent for a grantor to convey the fee of land and reserve to himself, his heirs, and assigns, fishing privileges in the waters covering the land conveyed,[10] and the right of profits à prendre thus reserved has been regarded as an estate or an interest in land which is inheritable when granted in fee.[11] The grant of fishing privileges to the grantee "his heirs and assigns" has also been held to be assignable,[12] although not to be divisible so as to subject the dominant tenement to a greater burden than originally contemplated.[13] A mere personal right to fish, however, can be neither assigned nor inherited.[14]

A grant or lease of land on the banks of a nonnavigable stream carries with it, as an incident, the right of fishing, unless such right is expressly reserved,[15] or unless the terms of the grant or the circumstances under which it is made are such as to indicate conclusively that the fishery is not intended to pass.[16] A grant of land under or around a nonnavigable pond or lake prima facie carries with it by implication the exclusive right of fishing in the waters of such pond or lake.[17] So, also, the grant of the water in a nonnavigable river or lake without the soil passes the right of fishing in such water.[18]

By custom. A right to take fish in another's fishery being a right of profit in lands as distinguished from an easement cannot be claimed by custom, for the reason that, if such a custom were allowed, it might and probably would result in the destruction of the subject matter to which it applies.[19]

By prescription. The right of fishing in nonnavigable waters over or on the soil of a private proprietor may be acquired by an uninterrupted and exclusive occupation and enjoyment, adverse to the owner of the soil, and continued for twenty years, or for the period of time, whatever it may be, limited by the statute of limitations for the right of entry on land.[20] There must, however, be an actual and exclusive occupation and enjoyment of the fishery, adverse to the riparian proprietor;[21] the annual of years at an annual rental and accepts and retains a partial payment of the specified rental, he is not in a position to repudiate the contract on the ground that the first year's rent was not paid in full in advance, when the instrument itself was not fairly susceptible of such a requirement.—Boyd v. Colgan, supra.

Permits to others
Grantee under contract granting fishing privileges had no authority to give permit to others to exercise privileges.—Boyd v. Colgan, 268 P. 794, 126 Kan. 497.

Termination
A written agreement between an owner of a slough, covered with water by building a dam, and a club granting to the club exclusive fishing rights in the waters of the slough, except those reserved to himself, terminable by either party, was terminated by the club's action in cutting the dam.—Thomas v. Fin & Feather Club, 171 S.W. 698, 106 Tex. 490, reversing Fin & Feather Club v. Thomas, Civ.App., 138 S.W. 150.

10. Two grants

License to fish
A person who has a license from the officers of a town to use a reservoir for fishing and sailing during his natural life cannot, by the use of this license, obtain an absolute right temporary use of a fishing privilege is not sufficient.[22] A trespasser cannot acquire a prescriptive right of fishery.[23] Where the owner of a fishery does not himself work it for profit but suffers the public to fish in it without objection, a user by an individual, which is not distinguished from that of the public, will be considered permissive, and not adverse, unless there is evidence that it was under a claim of right in himself, and that the owner, knowing of such claim, acquiesced in it.[24]

By public. Since certainty of person as to the grantee is necessary to the validity of a grant, the general public cannot acquire a right of fishery by grant, or by prescription, which presupposes a grant;[25] nor can such right be acquired by dedication, see Dedication § 8; nor can a license to enter on land and take fish be implied from a custom or usage, in the country at large, since the public generally cannot accept a license.[26] It has also been held that the fact that the state stocks a private pond or stream with fish does not give the public any right to fish therein.[27]

B. IN PUBLIC WATERS

§ 6. In General

As a general rule, the public has a common right to fish in navigable waters.

As a general rule all the members of the public have a common and general right of fishing in public waters, such as the sea and other navigable or tidal waters, and no private person can claim an exclusive right to fish in any portion of such waters,[28]

Fish trap

One person is not entitled to maintain a fish trap in navigable waters which deprives others of the right to fish therein.—Radich v. Fredrickson, 10 P.2d 352, 139 Or. 378.

Riparian rights inapplicable

English common-law rule giving to riparian owners along navigable streams above tidewater the exclusive right to fish therein because of their ownership of stream beds is not applicable in determining right to fish in navigable streams in Texas, beds of which are owned by state for benefit of public.—Diversion Lake Club v. Heath, 86 S.W.2d 441, 444, 126 Tex. 129, citing Corpus Juris, and affirming, Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 566.

Statutory navigable streams in Texas are public, and their beds and waters are owned by state in trust for benefit of people and subject to use by public for fishing to same extent as streams navigable in fact.—Diversion Lake Club v. Heath, 86 S.W.2d 441, 126 Tex. 129, affirming, Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 566.

In Hawaii

(1) One acquiring title to portion of ahupuaa has right of piscary in sea adjoining, subject to rights of konohiki in fishery.—Damon v. Tsutsui, 31 Hawaii 678—Smith v. Laamea, 20 Hawaii 750.

(2) Fishing rights granted by 1846 statutes to tenants were granted also to those who might thereafter become tenants, and each succeeding tenant derived fishing rights from statute, not grantor or lessor.—Damon v. Tsutsui, supra.

(3) Explicit and implicit in the Hawaiian Organic Act §§ 95, 96, is the purpose of the congress of the United States to make all fisheries in the sea waters of the Territory, not included in any fish pond or artificial enclosure, free to all citizens of the United States. To that end it repealed all of the preëxisting laws of the Republic of Hawaii which conferred exclusive fishing rights and provided a method by which, in conjunction with the local statutes pertaining to eminent domain, private fishing rights, which in law constituted vested rights, might be segregated and acquired for the use of the citizens of the United States on making just compensation.—Bishop v.

except in so far as he has acquired such right by grant or prescription, as discussed in § 9, infra. This rule applies notwithstanding the title to the bed of such a stream is in the riparian owner,[29] and notwithstanding his ownership of the abutting upland carries with it the right of access to deep water.[30] In some jurisdictions the right of a riparian owner to fish in the river arises from his right to share in the common right of fishing reserved to the public, and not from his ownership of the soil;[31] but in some jurisdictions the owner of land adjacent to tidewater has a right of fishery therein, which is exclusive of the common right of fishery in all public waters.[32] It has been held that the right of fishing is incident to the right of navigation,[33] but it has also been held that the right to take fish from public waters exists because such waters are public and not as an incident to the right of navigation, which also exists because such waters are public.[34] The right of fishing on the high seas, without the territorial limits of any state, is a right common to all mankind, and cannot be granted or restricted by any particular nation.[35]

§ 7. In Great Ponds and Lakes

The right to fish in a navigable lake is a public right, and in some jurisdictions the public has the right to fish in great ponds.

It is generally held that, in the absence of a special legislative grant, the right of fishing in large fresh water lakes and ponds is a public right;[36] and under some statutes and colonial ordinances the right to take fish from a great pond of more than a specified area is a public right which every inhabitant who can obtain access to the pond without trespass may exercise so long as he does not interfere with the reasonable exercise by others of these and like rights in the pond, and complies with any rules established by the legislature or under its authority.[37] The right of fishing in such ponds, however, may be appropriated by the legislature or by local governments, such as towns, acting under its authority;[38] and under some statutes such a pond may be leased to private individuals for the purpose of fish culture, the lessees having the exclusive right of fishing therein.[39] An owner of land abutting on one of such lakes or ponds has no greater rights than others to fish in front of his land, except to the extent that he is given greater rights by statute,[40] or acquires them by grant or prescription, as hereinafter discussed in § 9.

The right of fishing in the "Great Lakes" and in their contiguous bays is a public right just as much as if those waters were subject to the ebb and flow of the tide; and the particular rights of fishing are not limited to the particular portions thereof which are navigable.[41]

§ 8. Extent of Right

The right of the public to fish in navigable waters must be exercised with due regard to the rights of others.

The right of fishing in navigable waters, being open to all the people in common, must be exercised by each person with due regard to the rights of the others, that is without interfering with the reasonable exercise of the same right by others,[42] and, hence, where a person acquires possession of a particular fishing place, he has a prior right to fish at that place so long as he maintains such possession,[43] and complies with statutory regulations.[44] A right of fishing in navigable waters does not include the right to erect huts on the shore for fishermen.[45] A riparian owner's right to dig a ditch to prevent flooding of his lands is not necessarily prevented because the fishing value of the lake might be diminished.[46] A common right of fishery in public waters is subject to legislative regulation or restriction by the states, see infra § 26, and to the rights which the Constitution of the United States provides shall be exercised by the general government.[47]

Mahiko, 35 Hawaii 608—Damon v. Tsutsui, supra.

(4) Within meaning of Organic Act, fishing rights granted by 1846 statutes to tenants were exclusive, and fishing rights were not "vested" in case of persons who did not become tenants until after April 30, 1900.—Damon v. Tsutsui, supra.

(5) Organic Act repealing laws conferring exclusive fishing rights is not unconstitutional in so far as it affected persons becoming tenants after April 30, 1900.—Damon v. Tsutsui, supra.

Artificial level. It has been held that if a riparian owner voluntarily and artificially raises the level of the waters of a navigable lake, river, or stream so as to flood his own land, the public right of fishery is correspondingly extended so long as the artificial condition exists.[48]

Rights of navigation. Both the common right of fishing in navigable waters and a private exclusive right of fishing in such waters acquired by grant or prescription are subordinate to the public right of navigation, and must be so used as not to prejudice that right where it is exercised with due care and skill;[49] but this rule does not permit the common right of fishery to be obstructed or interfered with by an unnecessary or unreasonable exercise of the right of navigation.[50]

Right to trap site. Under some statutes where a person acquires physical possession of a certain trap site or location in public waters, he will be protected from trespass by another; but in order to maintain a continuous right to such site the owner must maintain actual physical possession or occupancy by substantial improvements, and if his structures are destroyed or carried away by the elements he must again assert his dominion over the site by either an inclosure or the erection of such improvements as the nature of the situation, or the purpose for which it is to be used, requires. Where such possession is not acquired or maintained, he cannot claim an exclusive right to fish by a trap at a particular place, even though he has a permit from the war department to establish a fish trap in such waters, and even though he has a license from the territorial government to engage in the business of catching fish by means of a fish trap.[51]

Territorial extent. Fishing implies a reasonable use of the waters and shore line of navigable streams,[52] and as long as they do not go on the uplands of the riparian owner, the public may go on navigable streams to fish without committing a trespass;[53] but the right to fish in public water does not carry with it a right to cross or trespass on privately owned land in order to reach the water.[54] The public right of fishing in navigable waters extends to high-water mark,[55] even where the title of the adjoining riparian owner runs to low-water mark;[56] and within the territory below high-water mark the public right of fishery is paramount to the uses of the riparian owner,[57] except where the soil below such mark has been granted to such owner.[58]

Above high-water mark the public have no right to go for the purpose of fishing, and hence in the exercise of the right of fishing must not trespass on adjoining private lands above such mark.[59] The exclusive right of using that portion of the shore or beach above high-water mark, as a general rule, belongs to the riparian proprietor, but he cannot exercise any prerogative in the manner of catching fish which differs from that which may be legally asserted by every other citizen.[60]

§ 9. Private Rights

A private exclusive right to fish in a portion of public waters generally may be acquired by grant or by prescription.

A several or exclusive right of fishery in a portion of navigable or public waters may be acquired by ancient grant, or by or under the authority of a legislative enactment,[61] subject to rights of navigation, see supra § 8, except that such a grant cannot be given by the legislature if it infringes a special statutory or constitutional provision,[62] or if it interferes with the vested rights of particular individuals.[63] Such grants, however, are strictly construed, and an intention to part with any portion of such public right will not be presumed unless clear and special words are used to denote it,[64] but a grant or lease which is valid on its face is presumptively valid.[65] A grant or lease of fishing grounds in public waters, which is valid on its face, is not subject to collateral attack, but the validity of such a grant is subject to attack by a proceeding in equity, or in proceedings between persons claiming

Injunction

The trial court correctly enjoined defendants from trespassing on any of the land owned by plaintiff surrounding the waters of the lake, while permitting them to go on the lake from a public road which crossed the lake on a low bridge.—Diversion Lake Club v. Heath, 86 S.W.2d 441, 126 Tex. 129, affirming, Civ.App., 58 S.W.2d 566.

Right to complain

Franchise

An exclusive right to fish in certain waters manifestly is a franchise if it is a private, exclusive monopoly of a public right.—Slingerland v. International Contracting Co., 60 N.Y.S. 12, 43 App.Div. 215, affirmed 61 N.E. 995, 169 N.Y. 60, 56 L.R.A. 494.

In Hawaii

(1) At the time of the annexation of the Hawaiian Islands to the United States, no official records of the boundaries of private fishing rights were in existence. The original statutory grant of private rights of piscary in the sea waters adjoining the Islands by the ordinance of 1839 did not contemplate an ultimate official determination of their boundaries. The fisheries were apportioned, under the ordinance, accordingly as they existed by "ancient regulation." Under the statutes defining private fishing rights, the extent of the area subject to a statutory private fishing right depended on "ancient regulation." Proof of the incidents of ancient regulation, including the boundaries of private sea fisheries, depended on the facts.—Bishop v. Mahiko, 35 Hawaii 608.

(2) No judicial or administrative procedure existed prior to annexation for officially establishing the boundaries of private fisheries. The mahele division did not include descriptions of the lands included therein, each land being designated by name. It made no reference to fisheries. The commissioners to quiet titles were without jurisdiction to award fisheries, except as the same, in the exercise of their jurisdiction to settle titles to "lands," might incidentally come in question. Under the laws of Hawaii, awards of ahupuaas and ilis were made by name only, both by the commission to quiet land titles and the minister of the interior, and until their boundaries were established officially they afforded no means of identification of the fishery belonging thereto. The boundary commissioners were without jurisdiction to settle the boundaries of fisheries.—Bishop v. Mahiko, supra.

(3) At the time the Islands were annexed to the United States, it could not be said with any degree of assurance how many private fisheries existed in the Territory.—Bishop v. Mahiko, supra.

adversely under different grants.[66]

Fishing location. Under some statutes, a person may acquire a right to fish with certain appliances at a certain location, provided he establishes his location and appliances in the prescribed manner and secures a license therefor,[67] and the locator may claim the exclusive right of fishing with certain appliances at such location for the period of his license.[68] The rights thus secured are personal rights and are personal property.[69] A locator who has properly established a location may enjoin another licensee from infringing on his rights in violation of the statute;[70] but where a location is abandoned, the same territory may be located by another, regardless of its prior use,[71] and a location will be regarded as abandoned if the locator does not take the steps prescribed by statute for the continuation thereof.[72] If a location is invalid because of a prior location, it will not ripen into a valid location at the expiration of the prior license, nor by its abandonment.[73] Permits from the federal government having only to do with possible obstructions to navigation are immaterial in determining the right to a fishing location under a state statute;[74] and whether one locating a fishery in public waters has a federal permit is a matter wholly between the locator and the federal authorities, and the want of such permit does not authorize another person subsequently to appropriate the location.[75]

It has been held that the first person acquiring actual peaceable physical possession of a location of a fish trap on unoccupied public land of the United States in Alaska, not reserved from such location, placing substantial improvements thereon, continuing the same to completion with reasonable diligence, and maintaining it for a lawful purpose, acquires a right thereto.[76] All acts of giving notice of preparation become immaterial, as one cannot keep another from taking possession of an unoccupied site for a fish trap by putting up a notice or anchoring a buoy.[77] Some statutes prohibit the

(2) Failure to construct fishing appliance beyond certain point for statutory period constituted "abandonment" of location beyond that point, since to maintain continuous right to fishing location, licensee must maintain actual and physical possession thereof.—Carlisle Packing Co. v. Pacific American Fisheries, 295 P. 155, 160 Wash. 353.

(3) Where there is a controversy as to whether the location is in Washington or in Oregon, as long as applicant keeps her tender and application seasonably standing, the enforced failure to build a trap within the time prescribed by law will not be deemed an abandonment thereof.—Gile v. Hoy, 289 P. 1061, 133 Or. 699.

(4) Under a statute providing that, if the locator or owner neglects to construct his appliances for two consecutive fishing seasons covered by this license, such location shall be deemed abandoned, the term "fishing season" is identical and coextensive with the license year.—Olsen v. Davis, 258 P. 838, 145 Wash. 1.

(5) Accordingly, one securing fishing license in July, renewing same next April, and constructing trap in August has not abandoned location.—Olsen v. Davis, supra.

location of fish traps within a certain distance of another lawfully located trap, or within a certain distance of the mouth of any river,[78] and the location of a fish trap within the prohibited distance may be enjoined by the holder of the prior trap site,[79] provided he can show that it works material injury to himself.[80]

An applicant for a license to set a fish trap in the public waters of the state is not asserting a property right; he is seeking a privilege and must be content with the means employed by the state in bestowing this privilege.[81]

Where a fish trap or other stationary gear is so placed in navigable waters as to interfere with the exercise of the common right of fishery, it is unlawful and may be restrained, as shown infra § 24, and any license issued purporting to authorize the construction or maintenance of such fixed gear is a nullity.[82]

Assignment of grant. An exclusive right to take fish in navigable waters, acquired by grant from the state, may be assigned,[83] unless the terms of the grant are such as to preclude an assignment;[84] but where a right of fishery resides in common in the inhabitants of a place, a release or assignment by one of them does not convey any right nor extinguish any interest in him.[85]

Effect of Magna Charta. According to some authorities, the crown or sovereign has no power since the Magna Charta to grant a several or exclusive right of fishery in navigable tidal waters,[86] but that act did not affect several rights of fishery which had already been enjoyed for some time prior thereto,[87] and consequently, according to these authorities, if a private exclusive right of fishery in tidal waters is claimed by a grant from the crown, it must have had its origin not later than the reign of Henry II.[88] By other authorities, however, it is held that Magna Charta had no effect and in no way restricted the power of the crown to grant such a several right of fishery.[89]

Since Magna Charta the power to grant exclusive rights of fishery in navigable waters in England and Canada resides in parliament,[90] and in the United States in congress in regard to land under water within a territory,[91] or, if within a state, in the state legislature.[92] The colonies prior to the revolution exercised such a right by the governor and colonial assemblies.[93]

By prescription. A prescriptive right of several fishery in navigable or public waters may be acquired by the long, exclusive, and uninterrupted enjoyment of such right;[94] but as this right is based on the supposition that a previous grant has been made, every presumption is against it and it must be clearly proved.[95] It cannot be presumed where a prior grant could not have been made;[96] nor can it be presumed from the mere uninterrupted use,

(1) Under a statute prohibiting fish traps within five hundred yards of the mouth of any river in Alaska, and providing that for the purposes of the statute the mouth of the river shall be taken to be the point determined as such mouth by the Secretary of Commerce, the boundaries of the prohibited area cannot be determined until the Secretary of Commerce has determined the mouth of the river.—Booth Fisheries Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Alaska, 6 F.2d 500.

and enjoyment of such right in common with others; but it must appear that all others have been kept out by claimant and his grantors from fishing in the particular place in any manner.[97]

§ 10. Rights as to Oysters, Clams, and Other Shellfish

Except in so far as an exclusive right has been obtained, the right to take shellfish from lands or flats under public waters is in the public.

As a general rule the right of taking oysters, clams, and other shellfish from land or flats under public waters, below highwater mark, is in the public, except in so far as an exclusive right to a portion of such fisheries is acquired by an individual by a grant or lease from the state,[98] or by lease from the local government,[99] or an exclusive privilege is acquired by prescription.[1] It has been held, however, that an exclusive right to take oysters, etc., cannot be acquired by user alone,[2] especially by a nonresident, and that such a right, although properly acquired, cannot be retained by a former resident after he has removed from the state.[3] The possession and use of such exclusive right and a successful maintenance of the right when disputed or resisted, if not sufficient to give title by prescription, may give claimant the benefit of every legitimate presumption to supply any defects in his title.[4]

A statute declaring that the ownership of all fish is in the state is only in aid of the state's power of regulation, and leaves the interest of a landowner in mussels in a stream on the land as it was before.[5] A constitutional provision that the natural oyster beds, rocks, and shoals in the waters of the state shall not be leased, rented, or sold, but shall be held in trust for the benefit of the people of the state, subject to such regulations and restrictions as the general assembly may prescribe, does not limit the public use to which the legislature may put the natural beds to the propagation and taking of shellfish, and the legislature may authorize a proper public use of the tidal waters over such beds, even though such use renders the waters unfit for the taking of shellfish.[6]

Private lands. Clams grown on beds in private ownership are the property of the owner.[7]

§ 11. —— Right to Plant and Cultivate Oysters in General

Shellfish which are planted at a place where they do not naturally grow and the location of which is properly marked are the subjects of private ownership.

Oysters and clams, which are planted at places where they do not naturally grow, and where no oysters or clams are growing at the time, and the location of which is marked by posts or otherwise, are the subjects of private ownership, and are the property of the person who plants them, and the right of the owner of the bed is not restricted to the identical oysters planted, but extends to and embraces the offspring of parent oysters so planted, which remain within the bed,[8] and other persons cannot impair the planter's title to the oysters which he has planted, by depositing other oysters in the same place;[9] nor can his possession be questioned by a mere wrongdoer;[10] and the interfering with or taking of them by another person is a trespass for which an action will lie, see infra § 21. Such a planting of oysters is a legitimate exercise of the common right of fishery, and is not inconsistent with its reasonable enjoyment by others.[11]

Further, where a person violates a statute, or commits a trepass, in planting his oysters, he may be compelled to remove them, but he does not forfeit his property in them.[12] If a bed thus planted interferes with the exercise of the common right of fishing or of navigation, the interest of the owner in them will be subservient to the enjoyment of the public use,[13] but even in such a case a private person has no right to take them away and convert them to his own use.[14] Where, however, a person plants oysters on natural oyster lands, and thus mingles them with the oysters growing naturally, he is conclusively held to have abandoned them to the public, and has no property right therein, unless such right is conferred by statute.[15]

Forfeiture of right. The rights acquired by planting oysters may be forfeited by permitting the oyster bed to remain without stakes or marks of ownership for a long period of time after the original stakes have been carried away.[16] The shifting of a bed of clams, caused by an act of God, such as a hurricane, does not divest the owner thereof, who planted them, of his right thereto.[17]

§ 12. —— By Statute

a. In general
b. Nature and extent of privilege
c. Forfeiture of right

a. In General

The location or leasing of lands under public waters for the purpose of planting and taking shellfish is generally regulated by statute.

In most jurisdictions the right of planting and taking oysters, clams, etc., is now regulated by general or local statutes;[18] and these statutes have generally been held to be constitutional.[19] Limitations and conditions on private enjoyment of the right to take oysters need not be expressed as reservations of title similar to those which might be used by private grantors of property conveyed, but may result merely from legislation touching the subject.[20] While the various statutes differ in regard to particular provisions therein, it is usually provided that an individual may locate or have allotted or leased to him by the proper authorities a limited area of public flats or lands not already planted, and in which oysters or clams do not naturally exist, in which he will have the exclusive right of planting and taking oysters, clams, etc., for a limited time,[21] on his making a proper application therefor,[22] and complying with all other statutory requirements,[23] such as giving the statutory notice of his intention to locate or lease an oyster bed,[24] designating such bed by proper stakes and lines, or having it designated by the proper officials, so as to distinguish it from other parts of the water in which other individuals or the public generally has the right of fishery,[25] recording a written description thereof in the proper office,[26] actually using and occupying it in good faith for the cultivation of oysters,[27] and paying an annual rental.[28]

28. Sale of lease for rentals
(1) Under some statutes, on failure of a lessee to pay rent punctually, the shellfish commissioners are required to enter on the leased land and terminate the lease. They may in the name of the state institute legal proceedings for the collection of rents, take possession of, and sell

Some statutes apply only to certain specified waters or to a particular class of persons.[29] Provision is also made, in some statutes, for the settlement of questions and disputes in regard to the ownership, title, extent, or location of shellfishery grounds, by the shellfish commissioners.[30]

In some of the statutes there is an express prohibition against including a natural oyster or clam bed in the bed or grounds located or assigned,[31] and provision is also made for the determination or establishment of certain areas as natural or public oyster beds,[32] and for excluding barren grounds from such beds.[33] Some statutes prohibit all persons from taking oysters and clams from certain public beds, except for family use, without a license from the proper local authorities.[34]

Unoccupied ground is open to location, under some statutes, to him who first applies for it in the manner prescribed by statute,[35] and objection to an application cannot be made by any private citizen, except one who has been granted or has already planted the territory applied for;[36] nor can one claiming as owner set up, in resistance to the granting of a lease to another, the contention that the territory in question is not, because of its being his private property, a proper subject matter of a lease.[37] The mere fact that other parties had previously rented the ground gives them no superiority or right thereto over other applicants who have complied with the statute;[38] nor is unoccupied ground bound to be allotted before ground that had been previously occupied.[39] Applicant cannot be prejudiced by a delay, in securing action on his petition, which is due to no fault on his part.[40] One who fraudulently obtains a conveyance of land, including an oyster bed, is in no position to oust another who has been continuously in possession and use of such land as oyster land for a number of years, under a statute.[41]

Nonresidents. Some statutes expressly restrict the right to citizens of the state, and exclude a nonresident from planting or taking oysters or other shellfish from waters within the limits of the state,[42] even though he is either the sole or the part owner of land within a state having such a statute.[43] This does not preclude an agreement between a nonresident and a citizen by which the nonresident acquires and holds a derivative benefit and emolument from an oyster fishery;[44] nor does it preclude a nonresident from taking oysters as a bona fide servant of one having the right to take such oysters.[45] An expression of a preference by a nonresident as to who shall lease the shellfish rights adjoining his property, even though such expression be accompanied by some active participation by the landowner in securing the lease for his preference, at public auction, any lot leased and the oysters thereon, and receive the proceeds of such sale, and retain therefrom all sums due as rental and costs, and pay the surplus over to the lessee. The authority to sue in the name of the state is permissive, but not exclusive, and the state is not restricted to this one action by the commissioners.—Gladding v. Atchison, 115 A. 423, 44 R.I. 69.

(2) One suing shellfish commissioners, individually, to recover surplus proceeds from sale of oyster leases may properly proceed in assumpsit, and the duty of the commissioners, where a surplus of proceeds remains after sale of an oyster lease, is to pay over such surplus to the lessee, and they are individually liable to the lessee therefor, even if they have paid it over to the state treasurer.—Gladding v. Atchison, supra.

is not in conflict with a law preserving the right to lease to residents of the state.[46]

Proceedings before, and action of, officials. It has been held that the proceedings on an application for a lease of fishing grounds are analogous to proceedings on a writ of ad quod damnum; and that no notice need be given of the time and place of hearing on the question as to whom lands shall be leased as fishing grounds;[47] nor is it necessary that the members of a committee appointed to stake out the grounds should be notified to meet, or should meet together, before acting; and action may be taken by a majority of qualified members of the committee.[48] Under some statutes, a person whose right of property is to be affected by a decision of the commission of fisheries is entitled to a legal hearing,[49] and applicant who is not given notice of the hearing at which the commission nullifies the assignment of an oyster planting ground to him is denied a legal hearing.[50] Under a statute providing, in effect, that littoral proprietors are, on applying for locations on the foreshores adjacent to their uplands, to have preferential consideration, there is no grant to any such owner of a license or a right to a license.[51] Under some statutes an allotment or lease of such grounds to one of two or more applicants is discretionary with the shellfish commissioners, or other officials who have authority in the matter, and no appeal lies from their decision.[52] Under other statutes, if under the circumstances, applicant has a right to the land, the proper official has no discretion in the matter,[53] and it has been held that the acts of the official in assigning oyster ground are ministerial, although he is required to determine the existence of facts, which make it necessary for him to act.[54] Under some statutes the board has no jurisdiction to hear and determine an objection to a lease based on title to the bottoms affected.[55]

b. Nature and Extent of Privilege

The extent of rights conveyed by the location of a shellfish bed depend on the statute under which such location is made. Ordinarily, all that is granted is the exclusive privilege or license to plant and take shellfish therefrom.

The extent and limits of the rights conveyed by the location or designation of an oyster bed, and other shellfish beds, necessarily depend on the legislative will and intent as manifested by the act authorizing it.[56] Such grants, being in derogation of the common or public right, are to be strictly construed against the grantee, and nothing passes except what is granted specifically or by necessary implication.[57] The privilege must be extended in such a way as not to prevent other persons from enjoying similar rights,[58] and is subject to the state's right of control and regulation,[59] as well as to other public rights,[60] such as the public's right of navigation and of fishery,[61] and if it interferes therewith, the oysters or clams, etc., may be removed as a nuisance.[62] Generally, under the statutes, a person locating an oyster or clam bed has

Negligence

Ferryboat master was under a duty to exercise reasonable care to avoid damage to oyster bed near point at which boat ran aground during fog in attempting to free boat. He would not be liable for damage to the bed if it was a natural and proper incident to navigation of ferryboat and involved no negligence on his part. The owner of the ferryboat would not be chargeable with negligence because of efforts of master of ferryboat to free boat when it ran aground near oyster bed which caused damage to oyster bed, if neither owner nor his servants knew that oysters were or might be planted in area in which they might be affected by operation of the boat or efforts to free it.—Adams v. Carey, supra.

the exclusive right to plant and take oysters and clams from such ground during his term, and he is protected in this right from interference by others.[63] He does not take a fee simple title, nor can he use the property for any other purpose.[64] Under some statutes the privilege is merely a license,[65] which may be revoked at the pleasure of the state,[66] but not at the request of a stranger in a collateral proceeding,[67] and which ceases with the use of the land for that purpose.[68] In some jurisdictions, where oysters are planted during the continuance of such license, the licensee acquires absolute property in them and their increase, and may remove them within a reasonable time after the revocation of the license.[69] According to other authority, however, a licensee who does not remove oysters planted by him during his term cannot remove them without the consent of a subsequent licensee,[70] nor does he acquire any rights as against the representatives of the public.[71] Under some statutes, the grantee of such a privilege acquires a possessory title to the land,[72] and a property right[73] which may be transferred,[74] although there is authority to the effect that it is but a personal privilege which can neither be inherited nor assigned.[75] Under some statutes oyster leases cannot be assigned or sublet without the consent of the shellfish commissioners, it being the purpose of such a statute to prevent any one person or firm from securing a monopoly.[76]

If the grantee of the right of planting and taking shellfish fails to perform the statutory conditions imposed on such right, the right may be forfeited.

The requirements and conditions imposed on a grantee of the right of planting or taking oysters, etc., are not conditions subsequent, but are continuous, and on his failure to perform them the franchise or privilege reverts to the state without any affirmative action on its part to enforce a forfeiture,[77] or if proceedings to that end are taken, the state alone has the right to proceed in its courts to have such forfeiture declared.[78] Where the grantee of such franchise or privilege fails for a number of years to perform the requirements of the statute, and does not in good faith locate on the territory, plant a bed of oysters thereon, or continue to protect them by the marks recognized by law, a person who does so mark out the territory, and who plants a bed of oysters thereon, and protects them by proper marks, acquires a title to such oysters, and no person, not even the grantee of the franchise, has the right to take them from him,[79] and this rule applies whether the propagation is by the planting of seed oysters or by the planting of oyster shells.[80] Under some statutes relating to the sale of tidelands for oyster planting, the state land commissioner on the application of any citizen, has power to cancel sales if the lands purchased are used for any other purpose.[81] The commissioner is empowered to cancel on one ground only, that the land is being used for other purposes, and he is not empowered to cancel on the ground that the purchaser has failed to use it for oyster planting purposes.[82] Such a statute contemplates notice to the defaulting party, and, in the absence of a prescribed form of notice, any timely notice which informs him of the accusation against him and which gives him an opportunity to defend is sufficient.[83]

§ 13. Whale Fisheries

According to some usages, the property in a whale belongs to the ship from which the first iron or lance is placed in the whale.

A whale not being the product of human care or labor does not of itself purport to be property;[84] but, where a full and complete possession of it has been taken, it becomes property.[85] What constitutes sufficient possession of a whale to establish ownership to it as property is determined by the usages of the various whale fisheries. According to some usages the property in a whale belongs to the ship from which the first iron or lance is placed in the whale, by which it can be identified, whether it is attached to the boat or not,[86] although the actual killing is done by the crew of another vessel or they take part therein;[87] and anyone taking such whale while it still has marks of appropriation on it is guilty of conversion[88] and liable to the owner thereof for full indemnity.[89]

The measure of damages for the conversion of a whale at sea is the value of the oil and bone at the home port, less the expense of cutting and boiling, freight, and insurance, with interest;[90] and, where the conversion is of a whale which has been killed and has drifted from its anchorage, no deduction from the owner's damages is to be made for the labor of securing and transporting the whale, where that could have been done without cost by the owner, or for the uncertainty as to whether the owner could have found and secured the whale.[91]

Contracts of mateship. By a usage in the whaling business masters of vessels meeting at sea sometimes enter into a contract of mateship, the effect of which is to establish a species of partnership in the business of taking whales and procuring oil, so that, if the vessels cruise together, they divide equally the oil obtained before they separate; if they cruise separately, they make an equal division on their first meeting afterward; if they accidently separate and do not meet again, neither can claim of the other if one returns home full; but if they do meet abroad and neither is filled, the settlement and division take place immediately. Such a usage is reasonable and lawful, and a master, unless he has special instructions prohibiting his making such contracts, is presumed to have authority to conduct his voyage with reference to the custom; and a contract of mateship made by him is binding on the owners of the vessel.[92]

§ 14. Town Fisheries

In the absence of a statute to the contrary, or of a specific grant thereof to the town, the public has the right to fish in navigable waters within the limits of a town or other municipal corporation.

In the absence of statute, the right of fishery in navigable waters within the limits of a town or other municipal corporation belongs to the public, and the corporation as such can exercise no control over it;[93] and, where two towns adjoin a navigable river, the citizens of each may take the fish swimming therein.[94] The power to take fish and to regulate and control the right of fishing in waters within its limits may be given to such town by patent or grant,[95] or by an act of the legislature;[96] and, where such right is granted to a town, a riparian owner within its limits is liable for a violation of its regulations, notwithstanding he was accustomed to take fish from the waters before the grant to the town.[97] Under such grants or acts the right of fishing in waters within the limits of a particular town may be given exclusively to the inhabitants thereof,[98] such as the exclusive right of planting and taking oysters or other shellfish from waters within its limits;[99] or the town may be given the power to lease the right of fishery,[1] and such a lessee cannot deny the right of the town to make the lease in order to avoid the payment of the rent.[2] Where a town, although it has power to do so, has never made any restrictions as to the right of fishing within its limits, the residents of the town, in the absence of statutory restrictions, may fish therein free from restrictions.[3] A statute regulating the taking of shellfish from public or unleased lands is inapplicable to lands under water to which a town has title.[4] Where a lease of a great pond is made to a town, with covenants to be performed by the town and a provision that in case of breach of any of the covenants the fish commissioner may enter and expel the lessee, a breach of the covenants on the part of the lessee is not of itself an abandonment of the lease.[5]

§ 15. Interstate Fisheries

In the absence of a treaty between the two states, or unless the jurisdiction over the river is concurrent, the right of fishery in citizens on one side of the main channel of a river between two states can be regulated only by the laws of the state on that side.

The right of fishery in waters lying between two states is generally regulated and controlled by treaty between those states and by statutes enacted thereunder,[6] but, in the absence of such a treaty, the right of fishery in citizens on one side of the main channel of the river can be regulated only by the laws of the state on that side.[7] Where two states have concurrent jurisdiction over the waters lying between them, one state cannot prosecute a person for an act prohibited by its own laws but which is committed within the limits of the other state and is authorized in the latter state.[8]

§ 16. International Fisheries

The right to fish in international waters is regulated by custom and treaties and statutes enacted to give effect thereto.

§ 17. —— Seal and Other Fur Fisheries

The taking of seals and other fur bearing animals in Alaskan waters is regulated by treaty and statutes enacted pursuant thereto.

Seal and other fur fisheries in waters within the Alaskan territory are regulated by the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, and by statutes enacted to give effect thereto, under which treaties and statutes it is unlawful to kill fur seals anywhere within certain boundaries, or by certain instruments, or at certain seasons; and vessels, their cargoes, implements, etc., found within such boundaries engaged in that business or in killing seals with prohibited instruments, or in a prohibited season, are subject to seizure and condemnation as forfeited to the United States, or to Canada, according to the jurisdiction in which the offense is committed.[10] Under such acts the United States may lease sealing privileges in the Alaskan waters, subject to such regulations as the government may thereafter prescribe, and in case of such regulation the lessee is not entitled to damages alleged to result therefrom.[11] By the award of arbitrators under the treaty of arbitration between the United States and Great Britain, which award is the supreme law of the land and is binding on the courts as an act of congress, and which citizens of the United States have the same right to rely on as to their rights, under the statute, as citizens and subjects of Great Britain,[12] the jurisdiction of the United States to forbid the killing of fur bearing animals in waters of the Alaskan territory does not extend outside of the ordinary three-mile limit; and, therefore, an act of congress which forbids such killing must be construed to mean the waters within three miles of the shores of Alaska.[13]

A forfeiture of a vessel, etc., for a violation of such treaties and statutes does not depend on the intent of the owners of the vessel or her equipage,[14] and, therefore, instruments forming part of her equipage, although belonging to others than her owners, are forfeited,[15] as are also sealskins found on board the vessel as part of the cargo.[16]

In the absence of a statute authorizing or requiring a special license for seal hunting, it may be lawfully carried on by vessels plying only between or from ports of the United States under a coasting trade license.[17]

Presumption of violation. Where a vessel equipped for sealing is found within the prohibited zone, it is presumed, in the absence of evidence to the contrary, that she and her equipment were being used in violation of the seal fishing act; and the clearest evidence of good faith is required to exonerate the master of such a vessel.[18] The fact that such a vessel is near the prohibited zone should put her master on the alert to keep a full and accurate record of his position, courses, etc., in order that he may not pass the line and that by his records and charts he may be able, if called on, to demonstrate clearly that he was not within the prohibited area.[19]

§ 18. Indians' Rights of Fishery

Under some treaties, Indians may fish on their reservations without abridgment by state laws, but frequently, under the treaties, the state laws are applicable to Indians fishing outside their reservations.

Where a treaty with the Indians gives them the right to fish on their reservation, the state laws relating to fishing do not apply to them;[20] and, under some statutes, Indians are expressly exempted from the operation of the statute.[21] Where, however, the Indian reservation has been included within the limits of a state formed since the treaty, without reserving the rights of the Indians, such laws may vided for by the Root-Bryce Treaty functions and assumes control.—State v. Dove, 236 N.W. 322, 183 Minn. 272.

be enforced against them.[22] Treaties with Indians reserving in them the right of fishery will be construed according to their natural meaning and the Indians' understanding thereof.[23] A treaty with a tribe of Indians which secures to them the right of taking fish "at usual and accustomed places in common with the citizens" of the territory reserves to them the right to fish outside of the boundaries of the lands ceded by them by the treaty;[24] but such treaties, or treaties with somewhat similar terms, do not give to the Indians any exclusive or special privilege outside of their reservation, but only such rights as may be enjoyed by all citizens in common, and state laws abridging the fishing rights of citizens are equally effective as against the Indians.[25] The Indians' rights under such treaties are not subordinate to the powers acquired by a state in and over the waters in question on its being admitted to the Union as a state;[26] nor can such rights be taken from the Indians by grants to private persons, by the United States or a state.[27] A reservation, by congress, of certain islands for Indians, includes fishing rights in adjacent waters and submerged land, and the president, although not expressly authorized, can reserve such rights for them.[28]

§ 19. Rights of Aliens

A state may restrict the right of aliens to fish in state waters.

The legislature has the right to restrict fishing in state waters to citizens of the United States.[29] It has been held that the most favored nation clause of a treaty does not include the right to take fish from the public waters of a state, notwithstanding the existence of treaties with other nations providing that citizens of such nations shall have the same privileges and rights and shall not be charged any higher imposts or duties than those paid by native citizens.[30] On the other hand, it has also been held that, if a state permits one class of aliens to enjoy the privilege of fishing in state waters, it must also permit other aliens to enjoy the same privilege if their government has a treaty with the United States containing a most favored nation clause.[31]

C. CIVIL LIABILITY AND REMEDIES FOR INVASION OF RIGHTS

§ 20. Trespass and Other Actions for Damages

Drawing off water
Where a fishing club had dammed the water of a small lake so that it overflowed a slough, and the owner of the land under the slough, having a reserved fishing right, had used it and made improvements for fishing, the club had no right to change owner of the land,[33] unless a special remedy for such interference is provided by statute.[34] Thus an action will lie where one's fishery is injured by an unlawful weir, dam, or other obstruction on the stream above or below him;[35] or by the pollution of the stream by another;[36] or where his right of fishery in a navigable stream is injured by a boat or vessel carelessly, wantonly, or designedly running into his nets or other fishing appliances,[37] or by his being otherwise wrongfully excluded from or interfered with in such right;[38] or where one wrongfully enters or takes fish from another's private fishery.[39] A person, however, is not responsible for injuries to a fishery which are caused by acts which he has a legal right to do, and which he does in a careful and proper manner.[40]

§ 21. —— For Injury to Oysters, Clams, Etc.

An action will lie for a wrongful injury or interference with a private shellfish bed.

An owner or licensee of an oyster or clam bed clearly designated and staked out, or otherwise identified as required by law, may maintain an action against any person who wrongfully injures or interferes with[41] or takes[42] oysters or clams planted by him, although his planting is a public nuisance or misdemeanor,[43] or is on a spot which is a common fishery,[44] unless he has planted them where other oysters or clams naturally exist,[45] and although his permit or license had expired when the oysters were planted.[46] An action for trespass has been employed for the purpose of questioning the title of a claimant to a designated natural oyster bed.[47] On the other hand, an action cannot be maintained for damages, to an oyster bed, which are incidental to the right of navigation conducted in a reasonable and proper manner;[48] and it has also been held that, since the state holds in trust for the public the conditions by cutting the dam and drawing the water from the lake, so as to cause damage to the property and rights of such owner.—Thomas v. Fin & Feather Club, 171 S.W. 698, 106 Tex. 490, reversing Fin & Feather Club v. Thomas, Civ.App., 138 S.W. 150.

Oyster fishery as subject to right of navigation see supra § 10.

Fact that ferryboat ran aground in fog was not sufficient of itself to show negligence in operating ferry in absence of evidence of want of care in manner in which boat was operated, as respects liability of ferryboat owner for injuries done to oyster bed through efforts to free boat.—Adams v. Carey, 190 A. 815, 172 Md. 173.

Operation in fog

Fact that ferryboat was started on special trip over its customary course which was short, but tortuous for a tidal navigable arm of the sea, and cannot grant individual rights therein, impairing public rights, its lessee of land thereunder for oysters cannot recover of a city for injury thereto from emptying its sewage.[49] Where land and oysters thereon belong to tenants in common, neither possesses any such title to oysters planted or natural as will enable him to maintain an action for trespass against his cotenant for taking them from the land.[50] A bridge company may be charged with the negligence of its independent contractor in pumping sand to the injury of a shellfish bed, where the manner of doing the work was specifically provided for in the contract and when such manner of doing the work was improper.[51] Where defendant knew or should have known that plaintiff's lobster cars with lobsters in them were near the place where he was conducting dredging operations, he was bound to ascertain whether the pollution of the waters would injure the lobsters,[52] and, where the nature of defendant's work was not obvious, plaintiff could not be held to have had notice that the work would pollute the water near his lobster cars.[53]

§ 22. —— Pleading, Evidence, and Trial

The usual rules of pleading, evidence, and trial in civil cases apply in actions of this character.

The pleadings,[54] evidence,[55] and trial[56] in an

part of its length, in charge of "regular captain" when, due to fog, visibility was too low to permit those operating ferry to see objects marking the course, was not alone sufficient to establish negligence of ferry owner, although such conduct might be considered in determining whether manner in which ferry was operated was consistent with due care, as regards liability for damages to oyster bed while attempting to free ferry when it ran aground.—Adams v. Carey, supra.

Averments required by statute

Under some statutes a declaration for tortious injury to private rights claimed in oyster beds in navigable waters should state in the language of the statute that such rights do not cover any of the "existing natural or maternal oyster beds in the waters of this State."—Symmes v. Prairie Pebble Phosphate Co., 63 So. 1, 66 Fla. 27.

Variance

Where complaint alleged defendants damaged three "set-nets" for fishing and evidence showed damage to six "nets," there was no variance.—Mitchell v. Curtis, 296 P. 1078, 135 Or. 595.

A custom to take fish in alieno solo in an unnavigable river cannot be given in evidence under the general issue in defense of an action of trespass; but such custom ought to be pleaded specially.—Waters v. Lilley, 4 Pick., Mass., 145, 16 Am.D. 333.

Damage

(1) Where there is specific evidence of what plaintiff's loss of prospective profits amounted to, including such facts as that plaintiff had a market for his fish, the market value of matured fish, and the market value of fish not fully grown, the evidence is not too conjectural and speculative to afford a basis for recovery for loss of fish in a hatchery due to defendant's contamination of the water.—Bales v. City of Tacoma, 20 P. 2d 860, 172 Wash. 494.

(2) Evidence that four thousand small fish were placed in pond by riparian owners, that, following pollution of stream feeding pond, indefinite number were found dead, and that fish could escape either up or down stream did not authorize recovery from polluters for death of fish.—Williams v. Pelican Natural Gas Co., 175 So. 28, 187 La. 462.

Estimate of number

In suit for damages to clam and oyster grounds, testimony estimating number of oysters and clams was competent.—Thomas v. Ocean City Automobile Bridge Co., 156 A. 493, 108 N.J.Law 143.

Evidence held to support trial court's finding as to city's maintenance of a nuisance in polluting a fresh water stream, warranting recovery therefor.—Bales v. City of Tacoma, 20 P.2d 860, 172 Wash. 494.

Exclusion of particular evidence held proper

(1) In action for interference with fishing rights in arm of sea where tide ebbs and flows, evidence of title to shore.—Smith v. Wallace, 129 A. 444, 124 Me. 365.

(2) Irrelevant statute.—Smith v. Wallace, supra.

Good faith

On the question of punitive damages for forcibly excluding plaintiff from fishing in public waters, defendant may show that the acts complained of were not done maliciously, but with a bona fide belief in his asserted title to the fisheries in question, and in a bona fide attempt to protect what he believed to be his property.—Pacific Steam Whaling Co. v. Alaska Packers' Ass'n, 72 P. 161, 138 Cal. 632.

Negligence

Evidence that defendant failed to ascertain whether pollution of water would damage lobsters and to advise adjoining owner that its operations would pollute water was sufficient to show negligence.—Smith v. Bay State Dredging & Contracting Co., 179 N.E. 347, 278 Mass. 24.

(2) Plaintiff's contributory negligence.—Smith v. Bay State Dredging & Contracting Co., 179 N.E. 347, 278 Mass. 24.

(3) Whether defendant or person whom he induced to go with him disturbed headgate on pond used by action for injury to fishery rights are governed by the rules which control in such actions generally. Accordingly, plaintiff must plead and prove the essential elements of his cause of action entitling him to recover.[57]

§ 23. —— Measure of Damages

Generally the amount of damages recoverable is measured by the amount of damage done.

Except where punitive or statutory damages are permitted or prescribed by statute,[58] the amount of damages to be recovered for an injury to fishing rights is generally such only as are commensurate with the injury done, having regard to all the circumstances of each particular case,[59] and where a fishery is worthless no damages can be recovered.[60] Defendant's good faith in invading plaintiff's right of fishery may be considered on the question of punitive damages, but is immaterial on the question of compensatory damages.[61] In a suit to recover for the destruction of a fish trap, it has been held that damages may also be awarded for the loss of fish resulting from the breaking of the net and interruption of the business, where there is sufficient evidence of surrounding catches to afford a reasonable basis for computation of the loss.[62] It has been held that damages cannot be recovered for consequential injuries caused by erections constructed under a license from the state,[63] unless the damage results from the careless manner in which the construction is done.[64]

Under a special jurisdictional act conferring on the court of claims jurisdiction to hear, determine, and render judgment on claims for compensation for damages sustained by claimants by reason of injury to oyster beds operated by them caused by dredging work done in a particular harbor, claimant is entitled to recover damages sustained by him as the proximate result of defendant's negligence.[65] Claimant, under such circumstances, was under a duty to mitigate his damages if possible, but this duty will not bar a recovery by him where he was not given reasonable notice of the dredging operations to be undertaken.[66]

Plaintiff's former trespass

In an action for forcibly excluding plaintiff from fishing in public waters, the mere fact that plaintiff at one time committed a trespass on defendant's land will not of itself preclude a recovery of punitive damages.—Pacific Steam Whaling Co. v. Alaska Packers' Ass'n, 72 P. 161, 138 Cal. 632.

§ 24. Injunction

In a proper case, an injunction may be obtained to restrain an unlawful interference with a right of fishery.

Where an action at law will not give adequate relief and irreparable injury will result to the owner of a right of fishing, he may obtain an injunction to restrain an unlawful interference therewith,[67] such as to restrain the continuance of an unlawful weir or dam,[68] or fish trap,[69] the continuance of trespasses on exclusive fishing rights,[70] the excluding of the public from a public fishery,[71] the pollution of a fresh-water stream to the injury of a private fishery therein,[72] or an interference with oyster beds,[73] even though the interference or obstruction also amounts to a public nuisance or other misdemeanor.[74] An injunction will not issue to restrain interference with the public right of fishery, unless plaintiff shows special injuries to himself;[75] nor to restrain the building of a dam across a stream on the theory that its construction will be a public nuisance through its interference with rights of fishery, where the statute which authorizes the construction of the dam requires that sufficient fishways be provided.[76] Injunction has been held to be a proper remedy for the representatives of the people to prevent destruction of fish,[77] and the attorney-general may proceed without the intervention of a private relator to enjoin the unlawful destruction of fish.[78] It has been held that the right given a city by its charter, and by statute, to discharge its sewage into the ocean does not violate the contract rights of an oyster bed lessee, holding under a statute, which grants him the absolute right of occupancy for fixed periods, since these provisions relate to the occupancy of the land and not to the quality of water over it, and hence that such lessee is not entitled to an order restraining the city from so discharging its sewage.[79]

§ 25. Other Remedies

Remedies appropriate to the specific nature of the right enforced have been held to be available for particular invasions of rights to fish and in fish.

The respective rights of the parties arising from a grant of fishery in private waters may be determined in an action to quiet title.[80] It seems that ejectment will lie to recover a right of fishery which is appurtenant to plaintiff's land.[81]

An action for possession by the state will lie to recover the possession of a body of a whale taken within the coastal or inland waters of the state.[82]

Trover. Since mussels have a practically fixed habitat, they have been held to be sufficiently within the possession of the owner of the land to support an action for conversion against a trespasser, and this is particularly true as to shells he has piled on the bank awaiting transportation.[83] One who catches fish in a manner prohibited by law has not ownership or right of possession on which to base an action of trover against another for conversion of the fish.[84]

Nuisance. At common law, and by statute in some states, an unauthorized obstruction to the passage of fish or to the public right of fishing, in navigable waters, is a public nuisance and liable to abatement.[85] Oysters planted by a private individual on a natural oyster or clam bed, in navigable waters, constitute a public nuisance which any person may abate so far as is necessary to enable him to enjoy the right of taking oysters or clams from the natural bed, provided he acts in good faith and with reasonable care in doing so;[86] but planting oysters in public waters is not such a special appro-

81. Location of land

Where plaintiff brings ejectment for oyster beds, claiming them as appurtenant to his land, but fails to prove the location of his land, or that it is adjacent to the oyster beds, a judgment in his favor cannot be supported for the dominant tenement must first be located before the existence of the servient tenement can be determined.—Steelman v. Lafferty, 71 S.E. 524, 112 Va. 494.

82. Complaint

In action by state to recover possession of body of whale, complaint alleging that state owned whale and that defendants wrongfully seized it and withheld possession was sufficient.—State v. Lessard, 29 P.2d 509, 146 Or. 9.

83. Navigability of stream

The jury at least might find that the navigability of a stream containing mussels did not affect the landowner's possession of the mussels, as regards conversion by a trespasser.—McKee v. Gratz, Mo., 43 S. Ct. 16, 260 U.S. 127, 67 L.Ed. 167, affirming, C.C.A., Gratz v. McKee, 270 F. 713.

Jury question

In view of a statute prohibiting hunting and fishing only on inclosed and cultivated lands and private ponds, where there was evidence of a practice to wander, shoot, and fish at will on uninclosed and uncultivated land until the owner saw fit to prohibit it, it was a question for the jury whether persons taking mussels from a stream or pools and removing the shells were entitled to rely on such practice, and if entitled to rely on it at all, whether they could do so to the extent of the considerable and systematic work done by them, and it could not be said as matter of law that they were trespassers.—McKee v. priation of those waters as justifies the removal of the oysters as a nuisance, unless they interfere with the rights of the public, such as the rights of fishing.[87]

III. PROTECTION AND REGULATION

§ 26. Power to Protect and Regulate

A state has the power to protect fish and regulate fishing within its borders.

It is well established that, by reason of the state's control over fish within its limits, it is within the police power of the state, subject to constitutional restrictions, to impose by legislative enactment such restrictions and limitations on the catching of fish as may be reasonably necessary for the protection and regulation of the public's rights therein, even to the extent of restricting the use of, or right of property in, the fish after they are taken,[88] and of obliging all citizens to conform to such regulations by inflicting penalties for the violation of them.[89] The public policy, as manifested by such statutes, is aimed at the protection and conservation of fish for the present and future generations of the people of the state.[90] In the territories such laws may be enacted by congress, or by the territorial legislatures under authority from congress.[91] Granting

Function of government

The statute creating a commission of fisheries and relating to conservation of fisheries of tidewater Maryland is in relation to a "governmental function," since conservation of fisheries of tidewater Maryland is a function of government.—Dorsey v. Petrott, 13 A.2d 630, 178 Md. 230.

Injunction against state officers

Where a state includes harbors and bays in its boundaries, and includes a bay within a fish district, in the absence of affirmative action by congress taking control, the federal court has no jurisdiction of a bill against the officers of the fish commission for interfering with the operation of a fish reduction plant within the bay.—Ocean Industries v. Greene, D.C.Cal., 15 F.2d 862.

Jus privatum of state

The right of fishery in tidal waters is an incident of the jus privatum of the state, and is not an inherent and inseparable incident of its jus publicum. Consequently, the legislature, in the absence of any constitutional prohibition, has the right to take away such right or to authorize, permit, or suffer its tidal waters or their bottoms to be used for purposes which impair or even destroy their use for purposes of fishery.—Commonwealth v. City of Newport News, 164 S.E. 689, 158 Va. 521.

Prohibition of sale of game fish is within police power of state.—State ex rel. Fulwood v. Southeastern Express Co., 167 So. 674, 123 Fla. 515.

Public policy

It has always been the public policy of the state to protect and conserve migratory fish for the benefit of the people.—State v. Beaver Portland Cement Co., Or., 124 P.2d 524, rehearing denied State by Wilson v. Beaver Portland Cement Co., 126 P. 2d 1094.

Purpose of the game and fish statutes is to propagate and preserve such fish as benefit mankind. It is plain from such statutes that the state has asserted title to fish for the public good, releasing title at designated seasons to such of the public as lawfully reduce fish to actual possession.—State v. Freeland, 300 S.W. 675, 318 Mo. 560.

Delegation

The power to enact fish laws applicable alone to the territory may be delegated to the territorial leg-

the power of congress to establish a refuge for game, it is within the power of congress to provide for the making of such regulations, relating to the taking of nonmigratory fish, as may become necessary to maintain a proper and efficient migratory bird refuge.[92]

This legislative power extends to fisheries in private or nonnavigable waters, which by the common law would be private property,[93] at least where such waters are connected with other waters in which other persons have the right to fish.[94] It has been held, however, that the legislature cannot interfere with the fishing privileges of the owners of private ponds having no communication through which fish are accustomed to pass to other waters,[95] and the state cannot, under the guise of regulating fishing, deprive the owner of private waters of his exclusive right to fish therein and vest such right in the general public.[96]

A dealer in commercial fish is engaged in a business which is peculiarly within the control of the state under its police power.[97] Likewise, the legislature may exclude commercial fishermen from operating in public waters while admitting the public to fishing in such waters.[98]

Regulation and protection of fish under police power distinguished from condemnation is discussed in Eminent Domain § 8; regulation of fishing as exclusively within state control, in Commerce § 29; and the delegation of regulative or protective power as to fish to executive officers or boards, in Constitutional Law § 138 b (4) (e).

A municipal corporation has no such property interest in the fish in waters within the corporate limits as to authorize it to restrict by ordinance the catching of such fish, in the absence of authority delegated to it by the legislature.[99]

Fish brought from outside state. For the protection of its fish within its own waters, the state may regulate the possession and disposition of fish when brought within the state from another jurisdiction.[1] It has been held that statutes which are intended to regulate and protect the fishing industry of the state should contain an express provision that their terms shall apply to fish imported from other jurisdictions, if such be the legislative purpose, otherwise the provisions of the act will be construed as limited to the waters of the state's jurisdiction.[2]

Territorial limits. The mere establishment of concurrent jurisdiction between two states of a river lying between them does not place a limitation on the power of one of the states to protect fish within its boundaries including such river,[3] and a compact, between two states having concurrent juris-

To grow and sell fish

(1) Under some statutes a person may establish a private pond to propagate fish in water on premises of his own, where food fish do not naturally abound, and he may propagate and grow fish therein, and may sell them himself directly to the consumer.—Sherwood v. Stephens, 90 P. 345, 13 Idaho 399—State v. Dolan, 81 P. 640, 11 Idaho 256.

(2) Where a person constructs ponds or lakes on certain streams which are the natural spawning grounds for trout and other fish, and the area of the ponds so constructed does not exceed five acres, and also constructs a dam near the mouth of one of the streams and a lumber trap to prevent the fish raised in such ponds from getting into the river, which is the natural outlet of such streams, such ponds are not private ponds within the meaning of such a statute.—State v. Dolan, supra.

Stocked lakes

A statute authorizing the state game and fish commission to declare a closed season on fishing in waters of the state does not apply to private landlocked lakes, which are disconnected from other waters and streams, and which have not, subsequent to such enactment, been stocked with spawn or fish by the state at the owner's request or by his consent.—Newman v. Ardmore Rod & Gun Club, Okl., 125 P.2d 191.

Statute prohibiting taking of fish for commercial purposes, except under permit from game and fish commission, was inapplicable to waters wholly on premises belonging to individuals.—Arkansas Game & Fish Commission v. Storthz, 29 S.W.2d 294, 181 Ark. 1089.

diction over a river, that all regulations for preserving and protecting fish in the river should be approved by both states is merely a limitation beyond which the states may not go, but is not an inhibition against the narrowing by either state of the class of persons who may be permitted by it to take fish,[4] or of the kind of appliances they may use.[5] Of course, a compact between states requiring mutual consent and approbation of all laws and regulations as to waters covered thereby does not affect laws and regulations by one state as to waters not included in the compact.[6]

A nation may regulate and control fisheries in tide waters within its territory,[7] as defined by international law, see the C.J.S. title International Law § 7, also 33 C.J. p 406 note 68–p 408 note 78. Where congress in regulating fishing in coastal waters has occupied but a limited field, a state has authority to protect its interests therein by additional or supplementary legislation.[8] The fact that a person might find himself unable to carry on his fishing operations beyond the state's jurisdiction without entering and operating his boat in state waters does not render a statute making it necessary for him to apply for a permit to operate the boat in state waters void on its face, if the requirements of such statute are sustainable as a proper exercise of the police power in the conservation of the state's fisheries.[9] Likewise, it has been held that a state may regulate fishing from boats belonging to its citizens and operated out of the state's ports, even though such fishing is done on the high seas beyond the territorial jurisdiction of the state.[10] It has been held, however, that where a vessel is outside the waters of a state the breach by the owner of the conditions of his license and bond by refusing to stop and submit to a search, or to return to state waters, on the order of a fish warden, is a mere breach of contract and not a criminal offense since the legislative and judicial power ends at the state line.[11]

§ 27. Constitutional and Statutory Provisions

Legislative regulations of fishing must conform to constitutional requirements. The usual rules govern the construction and operation of statutes regulating fishing.

The legislative regulations or restrictions of fishery rights must, of course, come within such limitations as have been imposed by the state and federal constitutions,[12] but the courts should not, by a narrow construction of constitutional provisions, destroy such statutory regulations.[13] The federal Constitution does not permit a state, under the guise of conservation of fish, to work out ulterior designs, and the real purpose of the legislation must be within the scope of the state's residuary sovereignty and appertain to the protection of fish.[14] The purpose of a constitutional provision giving the legislature power to enact such laws for the protection of fish as it may deem appropriate is to give the legislature ample power to protect fish, and such a constitutional provision should be liberally construed.[15] The legislature's power to change laws regulating fish is not lost because those adversely affected have been licensed to operate under prior laws.[16] Where a state has relinquished all right to dispose of the public domain, its statutes regulating fishing must not conflict with the laws of congress relating to the disposition of the public domain.[17] A statute extending provisions of a former statute regulating fishing to all waters of a county is not invalid as arbitrary and unreasonable, even, if it is true that some bodies of water in the county do not require such regulations.[18]

The construction, operation,[19] and repeal[20] of statutes regulating fish are governed by the general rules relating to statutes. A statute which applies to all "territorial waters" of the state is not void for indefiniteness because it fails to define them.[21]

Fishing incident to navigation is not protected by Ordinance of 1787, nor by Constitution.—Krenz v. Nichols, 222 N.W. 300, 197 Wis. 394, 62 A.L.R. 466.

21. Intent of the legislature in enacting statute prohibiting commer-

Special or local legislation regulating or protecting fish is considered in the C.J.S. title Statutes § 210, also 26 C.J. p 624 note 97, and 59 C.J. p 739 note 86 [c], p 740 note 88 [q] (14); regulations for preservation of fish as not invalid as deprivation of vested rights, in Constitutional Law § 239 c; the validity of fishing regulations under constitutional provisions against special privileges or immunities, in Constitutional Law § 467; and fishing regulations as being or not being a denial of privileges or immunities of citizens, in Constitutional Law § 477.

§ 28. Specific Regulations and Offenses

Under the various statutes, the time and manner of taking fish and the quantity of fish which may be taken have been regulated.

The legislature may regulate the time and manner of taking fish and make it an offense to violate such regulations.[22] The legislature may restrict the quantity of fish that may be caught;[23] and may restrict even an owner of land, or his licensee, from catching certain fish in streams or waters on his land at certain seasons of the year, or by certain methods,[24] unless the water from which they are taken is so inclosed as to prevent the passage of fish to other waters.[25] Legislation to conserve fish may be made applicable only to particular waters,[26] and some statutes exempt certain waters from the operation of the fish laws.[27]

Violation of regulations as preventing ownership is considered supra § 3.

Establishment of closed season or waters by administrative body. Under the statutes in many jurisdictions, the validity of which have been upheld, the state game and fish commission or similar or other administrative body is empowered to provide for a closed season for fishing,[28] and such a procial fishing at certain times by a nonresident in the territorial waters of Maine was to exercise authority as to all waters over which it had sovereignty under generally recognized law.—State v. Ruvido, 15 A.2d 293, 137 Me. 102.

Fish trap
Under a regulation prohibiting fish traps within certain distances to those already located, a homesteader acquired no right to fish particular spot in navigable waters, because of permit granted him by the war department, or possession of territorial license.—Alaska General Fisheries v. Smith, 7 Alaska 635.

Validity of statute
Persons procuring licenses to fish within two miles of shore of Saginaw Bay from riparian owner, as required by statute, cannot set up invalidity of such act, in action on lease for rent due, in absence of eviction by paramount title.—Brown v. Trudell, 198 N.W. 841, 227 Mich. 69.

(2) Where fresh waters lie in two or more counties, board of county commissioners of each county must concur in resolution prescribing closed fishing season, in order to render resolution effective.—Ex parte Lewis, supra.

Compact not violated
Orders of state fisheries board prohibiting the taking of salmon from the waters of Puget Sound between certain dates were held not violative of the joint compact between the states of Washington and Oregon, such compact having reference only to the waters of the Columbia River and its tributaries.—Vail v. Seaborg, 207 P. 15, 120 Wash. 126.

Method of fishing
Conservation commission had power to prohibit fishing during certain months except by hook and line in inland waters in certain counties.—People v. Soule, 213 N.W. 195, 238 Mich. 130.

Private waters
A statute authorizing the state game and fish commission to declare a closed season on fishing in waters of the state does not apply to private landlocked lakes, which have not been stocked with spawn or fish by the state at the owner's request or by his consent.—Newman v. Ardmore Rod & Gun Club, Okl., 125 P.2d 191.

Stocked or planted fish
The authority of the fish commission to close waters of the state to fishing is not limited to fish spawned naturally, but includes stocked or vision is a reasonable regulation.[29] Under some statutes prescribing a closed season for particular rivers within the state, the state fish commission cannot shorten or abolish that defined period, but it may lengthen and extend the statutory closed season on such rivers.[30] Under some statutes, on recommendation of the grand jury of any county, the board of game and fish has the power to regulate or prohibit the taking of fish during any month or months in which fish in the state waters spawn.[31]

The function performed by the secretary of the interior under the statute vesting him with power to set aside and reserve fishing areas in Alaskan waters is executive and highly discretionary, and, if the statute is assumed to contemplate that some area or areas shall be opened up, their extent and location is left entirely to the secretary's discretion.[32] The power to discriminate under this statute is geographical, temporal, mechanical, quantitative, and selective as to the different varieties of fish.[33] Limitations ordinarily applicable in the regulation of private enterprise have no application to the control of such activities.[34] In order for an individual to compel the secretary to open up additional areas for the location of fishing sites, it is necessary to show that to do so would be the only method to avoid an illegal discrimination.[35] The anti-monopoly provision in the statute, that no exclusive or several right of fishery shall be granted and that no citizen of the United States shall be denied the right to take, prepare, cure, or preserve fish in any area of the waters where fishing is permitted, does not guarantee equality in an absolute sense; it does not prohibit the reasonable discriminations required for the purpose of conservation of, and by the limitations inherent in, the type of fishing to which the secretary's judgment must be applied.[36] Such limitation was not intended to guarantee unlimited trap fishing, and in the absence of any other standard, the secretary's judgment concerning the number of traps consistent with right conservation must be accepted as conclusive.[37]

The statutes usually require that an order of an administrative body or officer establishing a closed season be published and that it be filed in certain designated offices, and a compliance with the statute is sufficient.[38]

The form of an order establishing a closed season must comply with statutory requirements, but it is not invalidated by failure to contain matters not required by the statute.[39] Accordingly, under the various statutes, it has been held that an order closing certain water against fishing with seines and nets need not name the time for which it is to be closed,[40] and that an order establishing a closed season need not recite in detail the reasons for the order.[41]

Fish and game districts. For the purpose of protecting the public's interest in fish in public waters, some states, by statute, have been divided into fish and game districts.[42]

Reduction plants. Some statutes prohibit the use of food fish in reduction plants except by permission,[43] and the use of food fish by reduction plants may be enjoined by the state.[44] The term "replanted fish.—State v. Gates, 206 P. 863, 104 Or. 112.

30. Or.—State v. Gates, 206 P. 863, 104 Or. 112.

31. Certification of recommendation
When the official certificate of the action of the grand jury has been filed in the office of the game and fish board, it becomes an office document, and the secretary of the board may certify such to be a fact. The certificate need not contain a reference that the order of the board was published as required by law.—Horne v. State, 153 S.E. 749, 170 Ga. 638.

42. Boundaries
There is no uncertainty in the definition by St.1917 p 1061 § 47, of fish and game district No. 20, as including Catalina Island and the portions of the state waters within certain lines, "state waters" meaning the three-mile zone around such island, especially in view of § 48, defining district No. 20A as consisting of the portion of the state waters around that island not included in district No. 20.—Ex parte Marincovich, 192 P. 156, 48 Cal.App. 474.

Statute held not to create new district
Cal.—Ex parte Giampe, 56 P.2d 974, 13 Cal.App.2d 275.

43. Nuisance
Use of food fish by reduction plant, in violation of statute, is such obstruction to free use of property in fish as to interfere with comfortable enjoyment thereof by the people and as such constitutes nuisance, and hence finding that such use caused no damage to state suing for injunction was unauthorized.—People v. Monterey Fish Products Co., 234 P. 398, 195 Cal. 548, 38 A.L.R. 1186.

"Waste"
Fishing with the purpose of delivering the catch to a reduction plant constitutes a "waste" of food fish caught, within some statutory prohibitions.—People v. Monterey Fish Products Co., supra.

44. Finding immaterial
In suit to enjoin reduction plant's illegal use of food fish, finding that sardines accepted and received by defendant were unfit for human food was immaterial, in light of uncontradicted testimony and admission by defendant that it was also engaged in receiving at its plant fish fit for human food.—People v. Monterey Fish Products Co., supra.

duction plant" as used in such a statute is sufficiently inclusive to apply to any plant engaged in the reduction of fish into other products which are not intended to be used for human consumption.[45] The maximum amount of fish which a packer may use for reduction purposes, under such a statute, is the quantity named in the permit granted by the fish commission, which may not in any event exceed the maximum set by the statute, but the commission may prescribe a quantity less than the statutory maximum.[46] If the applications for permits for reduction of food fish exceed in the quantity requested the amount of fish which the fish commission finds may safely be taken, it is the duty of the commission to make an equitable apportionment of its permits.[47] Where the statute so provides, the permit may be revocable at the option of the fish commission,[48] and a rule of the commission that each permit issued by it be restricted to the seasonal run of the fish to be used thereunder is not unreasonable.[49]

Restricting fishing to citizens. Since the state has in trust for its own citizens title to, and ownership of, fish in public waters, so far as they are capable of ownership while in a state of freedom, it may, through its legislative power, lawfully limit and restrict the right to fish to its own citizens, or to United States citizens,[50] and the state may prohibit aliens from accepting employment from one lawfully engaged in fishing in state waters.[51]

§ 29. —— Possession and Sale in Close Season

Under some statutes the possession and sale of fish during a close season is prohibited.

Statutes have been enacted and held constitutional in many jurisdictions, making it an offense and prescribing a penalty for any person to take or have in his possession certain kinds or sizes of fish during a particular season of the year, commonly called the close or closed season,[52] or, as to certain fish, during a certain number of years;[53] or to sell, offer for sale, or to have in possession for sale certain fish during the close season,[54] or, as to some fish, at any time;[55] and, under some of these statutes, it is immaterial whether the fish were acquired without any wrongful knowledge or intent.[56] Some statutes making it unlawful to have possession of

Invasion of property right
State may maintain action in equity to enjoin violation of law by packing company using more fish in its reduction plant than authorized by its permit, on theory that use of such fish is an invasion of property rights held by state in trust for people.—People v. Stafford Packing Co., 227 P. 485, 193 Cal. 719.

Requiring alien or nonresident to secure a license to fish see infra § 36.

Alien cooks on fishing boats, having no interest in catch of fish and not actually engaged in handling of any gear or in actual taking of fish, were not punishable under a statute prohibiting catching or taking of food fish by aliens, since they did not "catch" or "take" fish within the ordinary meaning of those words.—State v. Tomich, 255 P. 122, 143 Wash. 364.

Enemy alien
Under a statute providing that no license to fish shall be issued to any person unless he is a citizen of the United States or has declared his intention to become a citizen, a subject of a country with which the United States is at war, who has declared his intention to become a citizen, is entitled to a license, where the presidential proclamation defining the status of such aliens does not prohibit the granting of such a license. The fact that such alien cannot become a citizen during the state of war is immaterial.—State v. Darwin, 173 P. 29, 102 Wash. 402, L.R.A.1918F 1012.

certain fish do not apply to fishermen only, but include anyone having possession of such fish, although they were caught by another.[57] Packing and canning certain fish during the close season is prohibited under some statutes.[58]

Under some statutes, the possession or sale during the close season of prohibited fish is unlawful, although lawfully acquired during the open season;[59] but where, under the statute, only the taking of fish during a close season is prohibited, it is not an offense to have in one's possession, during a close season, fish caught during an open season.[60]

Some statutory provisions making it unlawful for any person to sell, offer for sale, or to have in his possession certain fish, during the close season, extend to such fish caught without the state or country and imported into it,[61] and the validity of such statutes has been upheld as necessary to protect local fish during a closed season.[62] In some jurisdictions, sometimes by virtue of express exception in the statute,[63] the statutes prohibiting the possession of fish during a closed season do not extend to fish caught without the state.[64]

§ 30. —— Method of Taking Fish

The method of taking fish is regulated by statute in most jurisdictions.

It is within the police power of the state to regulate the method of taking fish within the state, and in many jurisdictions penal statutes to this effect have been enacted,[65] as by making it a penal offense to catch fish in certain waters or at certain periods by means of seines, nets, or traps,[66] fishing

62. Statutes excepting fish caught in specified locality
A statute making it a misdemeanor to have, during closed season, possession of salmon caught outside of the state is unconstitutional, where, by proviso, it excepts salmon caught beyond the three-mile limit in specified waters, since such proviso permits the very fraud to be committed the prevention of which was the basis of sustaining the validity of such statutes.—State v. E. Harris & Co. v. O'Malley, 7 Alaska 201—26 C.J. p 628 note 34 [a].
Particular seines, nets, or traps prohibited
(1) Dutch net.—Rea v. Hampton, 7 S.E. 649, 101 N.C. 51, 9 Am.S.R. 21.
(2) Fish pots.—Middlekauff v. Le Compte, 132 A. 48, 149 Md. 621.
(3) Net having covered crib or heart.—People v. Shawl, 272 N.W. 875, 279 Mich. 475.
Placing of nets
(1) Under a regulation of the secretary of commerce, pursuant to Comp.L.Alaska 1913 § 264, prohibiting fishing nets within six hundred feet of each other, and prohibiting fishing prior to 6 A. M. of June 5 of each year, parties placing a set net dams or weirs,[67] poisons or explosives,[68] or by other devices,[69] except by hook and line;[70] and by making it a misdemeanor for any person to have in his possession such nets, seines, or other devices,[71] and providing for the forfeiture or destruction of such nets or other devices when found in use in violation of the statute, see infra § 42, regardless of the time of acquisition.[72] Some statutes limit the number of hooks which may be used by one person in fishing.[73] A statute prohibiting the catching of certain fish by net is not invalid as unreasonable because a fisherman lawfully fishing for other fish cannot prevent the prohibited fish from entering his net.[74] Under some statutes, it is an offense to take fish by draining or drawing off the water of a pond or lake. All persons who assist in drawing off the water in violation of such a statute are guilty as principals.[75] after that hour within the prohibited distance of another lawfully there violated the law, although they had made locations and posted location notices several weeks earlier, and before any other fishermen were at the lake.—Canoe Pass Packing Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Alaska, 270 F. 533.

(2) Under a fishing regulation prohibiting set nets within six hundred feet of each other, parties who laid a set net within six hundred feet of another were "fishing," within the meaning of the statute, and violated the regulation, whether or not they caught any fish.—Canoe Pass Packing Co. v. U. S., supra.

(3) Under a fishing regulation prohibiting set nets within six hundred feet of each other, parties simultaneously placing their nets twenty-five feet apart were both violators of the law, and defendants, who replaced their nets after they had been carried away by the ice, were guilty of violating the law.—Canoe Pass Packing Co. v. U. S., supra.

(4) Statute construed and held to prohibit the placing of a net or other obstruction within the mouth of any river, creek, etc., or within three hundred feet of any lock or dam.—State v. Dyer, 100 S.W.2d 653, 171 Tenn. 66.

Persons propagating fish under statutory conditions are owners, and may take them with seine.—State v. Zellmer, 210 N.W. 774, 202 Iowa 638.

Resident aliens

Law excluding resident aliens from operating fish traps in sea fisheries was constitutional.—Territory v. Takanabe, 28 Hawaii 43.

Statute held not ambiguous because one paragraph prohibits catching of striped bass except by hook and line, whereas another paragraph permits sale of bass accidently taken in shad nets in specified district during particular time.—Ex parte Vitalie, 4 P.2d 171, 117 Cal.App. 553.

Streams which dry up

(1) Where the statute prohibiting the taking of fish with a seine in any waters of the state, with certain exceptions, contains no exception as to streams, or ponds which dry up either wholly or partially in dry seasons, taking fish by seine from a pond which at times got so low as to cause fish to die was a violation of the law.—State v. Lowder, 153 N.E. 399, 198 Ind. 234.

(2) Under other statutes, taking fish with a seine from such waters is not an offense.—Ray v. State, 132 So. 755, 159 Miss. 887—Hathorn v. State, 119 So. 303, 151 Miss. 778.

Such fishing is permitted unless denounced by statute.—State v. Pyles, 176 N.E. 97, 38 Ohio App. 380.

Words "haul seine or drag net" do not contemplate or include cast nets, trammel nets, gill nets, pound nets and many other nets in common use in the fishing industry.—Christensen v. Commercial Fishmen's Ass'n, 187 So. 699, 137 Fla. 248.

Dynamiting pursuant to permit

Deputy game and fish warden dynamiting water to kill gar pursuant to permit was not criminally liable for killing other fish. Statutes were held to authorize dynamiting to destroy obnoxious fish when state game and fish commissioner thought that such fish would hinder or prevent propagation of game or food fish.—State v. Freeland, 300 S.W. 675, 318 Mo. 560.

Snag pole

Under a statute prohibiting fishing with a snag pole, and defining a snag pole as any pole to which a number of fish hooks are attached and which is designed to be drawn through the water for the purpose of catching fish, in view of a statute providing that every word importing the plural number only may be applied to one thing, a pole with only one hook may be a snag pole.—Muska v. Apel, 232 N.W. 593, 203 Wis. 389—58 C.J. p 778 note 76.

Nongame fish

Under a statute prohibiting the catching of game fish by any other means than hook and line, the catching of nongame fish with the hands is not unlawful—State v. Weindel, 2 P.2d 599, 52 Okl.Cr. 25.

Snaring with hook

An affidavit, charging the attempt to take and the taking of fish by jerking line with unbaited hook back and forth in water with pole and reel, so as to cause insertion of hook into any fish which might be in way thereof, charged public offense of taking or attempting to take fish by "means other than angling with hook and line."—State v. Mears, 12 N.E. 2d 343, 213 Ind. 257.

Construction

Since such statutes are penal in character, they should be strictly construed.—State v. Zellmer, 210 N. W. 774, 202 Iowa 638.

Purpose of possession

Under a statute providing that the possession of a seine for fishing shall be unlawful except where the use of such seine is permitted by law, a seine is not a nuisance per se. It is such only when in possession for the purpose of catching fish contrary to law.—State v. Zellmer, supra.

In Ohio the statutes exempt possession of fish nets within one mile of the Ohio River.—State v. Pyles, 176 N.E. 97, 38 Ohio App. 380.

73. Triple hook

Under such a statute a triple hook having three points on it but only one shank and one eye must be counted as only one hook.—People v. Roney, 230 N.Y.S. 583, 132 Misc. 746.

§ 31. —— Prohibiting Obstruction of Fish

In many jurisdictions the obstruction of streams so as to prevent the passage of fish is prohibited.

Statutes, the validity of which have been upheld, have been enacted to protect the passage of migratory fish up and down streams, although such streams flow over lands entirely subject to private ownership, as by prohibiting seines or other obstructions to their passage,[76] and authorizing certain local officers or committees to remove such obstructions, see infra § 37. A person who builds a dam on a stream annually frequented by fish is generally held to be under an implied obligation to keep open sufficient sluices and fishways for the passage of fish at the proper season;[77] and although a statute requiring the owner of an existing dam to provide a sluiceway for the passage of fish has been held void,[78] under most statutes the owner of such a dam is guilty of an offense if he fails or refuses, after due notice, to maintain adequate sluices and fishways,[79] notwithstanding such dam or obstruction had been maintained for the usual period of prescription.[80]

§ 32. —— Pollution of Streams

The pollution of streams so as to injure or destroy fish is prohibited in many jurisdictions.

The states may make,[81] and under many statutes have made,[82] it an offense to place any deleterious substance in a stream or other water to the injury of the fish therein, notwithstanding such substances had been discharged into the stream for the usual period of prescription.[83] Under some statutes an evil motive to destroy fish is not an essential element of the offense,[84] but under other statutes an intention to place or cause the destructive substance to enter or flow into the water is an essential element,[85] and if the pollution of the water is a result of an accident, the offense has not been committed.[86] Under some statutes, it is a defense to show that every reasonable and practicable means has been used to abate and prevent the pollution.[87]

In New York
(1) A riparian owner's right to maintain a dam in a river has been held to be subject to the right of the legislature to require the construction and maintenance of fishways therein so as to prevent the obstruction of the free passage of fish up the stream to the detriment of other riparian proprietors.—In re Delaware River, 115 N.Y.S. 745, 131 App.Div. 403.

(2) It has been held, however, that a party who held by patent from the state an absolute title, without restriction in the use or reservation, of both sides of a nonnavigable river had the right to erect and maintain, at or near the mouth of the river, a mill dam, although it operated to prevent salmon from going up the river, and that an act of the legislature, passed after the patent, which required slopes to be made in mill dams of the character of defendants, so that salmon might freely pass over the dam, did not affect defendant's rights, and as to him was unconstitutional.—People v. Platt, 17 Johns. 195, 8 Am.D. 382.

Construction of particular statutes
(1) Within St. § 1253, making it an offense to put into any stream any liquid, berries, powder, medicine, or other thing whereby fish may be sickened or killed, or the water rendered unfit for use, the phrase "or other thing" was intended to include any substance which would have the prohibited effect, and was not limited to substances of the same class as those enumerated, and therefore a mining corporation, which polluted the waters of a stream by drainage from its mines, so as to kill the fish therein, was guilty.—Commonwealth v. Kenmont Coal Co., 251 S.W. 1018, 199 Ky. 826.

(2) Likewise, under such statute, it is an offense to place large quantities of sawdust and other sawmill refuse in a stream, whereby fish are sickened and killed, and the waters rendered unfit for use.—Commonwealth v. Straight Creek Coal & Coke Co., 145 S.W. 738, 147 Ky. 790.

so as to affect injuriously the shore owner in the enjoyment of his right.[4] It is also an offense, under some statutes, to fish without the proprietors' consent in private ponds or streams entirely within their control, and in which fish are lawfully propagated,[5] and on which notices to that effect have been posted,[6] notwithstanding such ponds or streams were stocked with fish procured from the state fish and game commissioners;[7] or for one who is not the owner of such a fishery, to sell or offer for sale any fish grown therein.[8] It has been held that, in order that a pond or other body of water may come within the protection of such a statute, there must be some improvement for the propagation of fish,[9] and the stream or pond must be so far private property, and within the control of the proprietor thereof, as to confine therein the fish with which it is stocked.[10] Under some statutes the poster must show the date on which the waters were stocked, and the owner is subject to a fine if he maintains such poster for more than a year after the waters were last stocked.[11] The owner of property, within a statute prohibiting fishing on the lands of another without permission, must be a natural person, a corporation, or a quasi person or entity, such as a partnership.[12] Under a statute making it an offense to enter on the inclosed land of another without his consent and to catch or take fish, fishing does not constitute an offense unless fish be caught or taken.[13]

§ 35. —— Offenses as to Oysters, Clams, and Other Shellfish

Various statutes define particular offenses relating to the taking of shellfish.

It is an offense under the various statutes to deposit substances in public waters injurious to shellfish;[14] to take oysters from a licensed or private bed without the consent of the licensee or owner;[15] to take more shellfish than a specified quantity at one time;[16] to take oysters or other shellfish from certain waters[17] by means of certain devices,[18] or to fail to cull in the prescribed manner oysters so taken;[19] or to plant or take oysters without a license.[20] Under some statutes, it is an offense to take or destroy certain shellfish at certain seasons,[21] and under such statutes, the validity

Contaminated waters

(1) Under a statute providing that, on the department of health finding that certain waters are contaminated, notice thereof shall be posted at or near such area, a notice complying with the statute is sufficient and needs no signature.—Commonwealth v. St. John, 159 N.E. 599, 261 Mass. 510.

(2) Action of department of public health toward declaring area contaminated, and requesting that taking of shellfish therefrom be prohibited, was sufficient under statute.—Commonwealth v. St. John, supra.

(3) Under some statutes, no new newspaper publication is essential to prosecution for taking shellfish from area proscribed under earlier statutes, and a conviction for taking clams from area proscribed under prior statute may be had, without promulgation of regulations thereunder or examination under later statute.—Commonwealth v. St. John, supra.

Scallops

(1) Scallops are fish within the regulations of the state fisheries commission board, restricting the taking of fish in certain waters, and of the statute creating it.—State v. Dudley, 109 S.E. 63, 182 N.C. 822.

(2) Scallops which travel to and fro, and have no natural beds, are not within a penal ordinance against gathering shellfish from their beds of natural growth by nonresidents.—Smithtown v. Jewell, 168 N.Y.S. 88, 180 App.Div. 657.

of which has been sustained, even the owner of the shellfish cannot harvest them during the closed season,[22] notwithstanding evidence indicating that, under the circumstances, he could not harvest them during the open season.[23] It is also an offense, under some statutes, to take, sell, or have in possession certain shellfish such as lobsters under a specified size.[24]

Intent. Where the statute requires the immediate liberation, alive, of lobsters below the legal size, the intent with which short lobsters are being held is immaterial.[25]

Labels. Under some statutes, all packages used in the shipment and transportation of certain shellfish must bear a label stating certain required information.[26]

Sanitary permit. In the absence of a statute to the contrary, it is not necessary to obtain a sanitary permit to take shellfish from uncertified waters for bait purposes.[27]

Shellfish taken without state. Some statutes prohibiting the destruction of,[28] or the possession of,[29] certain shellfish apply even though they were caught without the state and brought into it, but some statutes have been held to apply only to shellfish taken within the state.[30] A proviso as to returning lobsters alive to the waters where they were taken does not apply to those caught without the state.[31]

Transportation. Under some statutes, the validity of which has been upheld, it is an offense to transport certain shellfish from certain fish and game districts into other districts.[32] A statute prohibiting the transportation of certain shellfish from a designated fish and game district does not prohibit transportation through such district.[33]

§ 36. Licenses

The statutes usually require a license to fish in public waters or by particular methods.

Under the various statutes, some of which apply particularly to nonresidents,[34] to entitle one to fish in the waters of the state, or in certain waters thereof and for certain fish, he is required to obtain a license for that purpose from the proper authorities, and it is made an offense for him to do such fishing without such a license.[35] Such a license has been required to entitle one to fish by Restricting fishing to citizens or residents see supra § 28.

Statutes construed
(1) L. 1915 c 6877 § 14 imposes a license tax of ten dollars on aliens or nonresidents engaged in taking fish from the salt waters of the state, whether by hook, line, rod, or reel, for purposes other than for their own individual use, while operating in whole or in part a boat engaged in the fishing industry. One who pays the license provided for in L. 1915 c 6877 § 14 is not required to pay the further tax of ten dollars on aliens or nonresidents engaged in the fishing industry, required by the succeeding paragraph of the same section. An alien or a nonresident employed on a boat engaged in the fishing industry is required to pay the license imposed by L. 1917 c. 6877 § 14, whether he actually fishes or not, and if he is on a boat not engaged in the fishing industry, but fishes for purposes other than his own use, he is required to pay the license of ten dollars; but one person is not required to pay both licenses.—McClain v. West, 87 So. 49, 80 Fla. 732.

(2) Under a statute prohibiting nonresidents from fishing in lakes and streams within the "jurisdiction of the state" without a license, the quoted words do not mean public waters only, but signify the power to declare and to enforce the law as well as the territory within which such power may be exercised.—People v. Lewis, 198 N.W. 957, 227 Mich. 343.

Employees
(1) Under some statutes mere employees of licensed fishermen, who work for wages and have no interest in the catch, must be licensed.—Alsos v. Kendall, 227 P. 286, 111 Or. 359—26 C.J. p 633 note 81 [b].

(2) Accordingly, a boat puller was required to be licensed.—Alsos v. Kendall, supra.

particular methods, such as by nets, traps, etc.;[36] or to fish for profit;[37] or to deal in fish;[38] or to transport fish of certain kinds, such as lobsters, beyond the state;[39] or to use boats in fishing,[40] or in planting or taking oysters.[41] Where under statutes, enacted under a compact between two states relating to fishing in a river serving as a boundary between them, the parties do not obligate themselves to issue any fishing licenses but limit the classes of persons who may have them, one state may narrow these classes or refuse to issue any licenses.[42] Under some statutes a license is not required for fishing in private waters.[43] The persons entitled to secure a fishing license are to be determined by the valid statutory provisions of the particular jurisdiction,[44] and under some statutes, a license to fish cannot be issued to a corporation.[45] Some statutes do not require the fish commissioners to issue a license to fish by certain methods merely on application, and the granting or denial of a license rests in their sound discretion.[46] Under some statutes, in order to obtain a license to seine, it is necessary that applicant have title or interest in real property on which to land the seines.[47]

The licensing of a fishing location is considered supra § 9, in connection with the acquisition of a private right of fishery in public waters.

Application. Under some statutes the issuance of a fishing license may be refused where the application therefor is not made in accordance with the statute, as where it does not state that applicant is a resident of the state, or does not disclose which of the several licenses authorized by statute he desires, or does not show the situation of the proposed fishing grounds.[48]

Display of license. Under some statutes no person may fish within the state unless his license is on his person, and he must exhibit it on the request of any fish warden or other public officer.[49] Also, under some statutes, no person may so fish unless a license button be at such time continually displayed on his outer garments in such a manner that the license figures are plainly visible.[50]

Municipality

In the Philippines, a grant of power to a municipality to impose a license tax on the privilege of fishing in municipal waters is valid.—Ayson v. Provincial Board of Rizal, 39 Philippine 931.

Statute held valid

The act of congress imposing taxes on fish oil works and fertilizer works in Alaska does not import a license to such works, and an act of the territorial legislature levying a license tax on manufacturers of fish oil and fertilizer, claimed to be prohibitory, is not in conflict therewith.—Alaska Fish Salting & By-Products Co. v. Revenue tax

Since statute, making it unlawful for one to engage in the business of carrying fishing parties for hire in a boat not propelled exclusively by oars in certain waters without a license, requires no examination of the boat or operator, and no option or power is vested in the issuing authority to refuse the license on tender of the prescribed fee, the act is an act to raise revenue, and was not passed as an exercise of the "police power" of the state, and the fee required is a "tax" rather than a "license fee."—Conard v. State, Del. Super., 16 A.2d 121.

Commercial fish

"The right of persons to purchase commercial fish for resale is not an absolute right, but a mere privilege which the state may grant or withhold at its pleasure. When the privilege is granted, however, the state may for its exercise exact such charges and impose such conditions as it may deem necessary to secure the preservation and conservation of its property."—State v. Monteleone, 131 So. 291, 292, 171 La. 437.

Wholesale sponge dealer

The statute imposing license tax on wholesale seafood dealers is not applicable to wholesale dealer in commercial sponges, as against contention that the statute imposes license tax on all wholesale dealers in any kind of salt water product.—Cunningham v. Stefanidi, 197 So. 722, 144 Fla. 214.

40. Noncommercial boats

(1) Provision of the statute regulating commercial salt-water fishing, and exempting from license provisions persons fishing with hook and line or rod and reel, was not made part of statute requiring the licensing of all boats engaged in fishing in the salt waters of the state, so as to except from license provision owner of boat used in noncommercial salt-water sport fishing by use of hooks and lines or rods and reels.—Coleman v. State ex rel. Cass, 198 So. 695, 144 Fla. 488.

49. Pa.—Commonwealth v. Neyhart, 30 Pa.Dist. & Co. 408.

50. Taking of bait fish or minnows constitutes angling or fishing within such statutes.—Commonwealth v. Neyhart, supra.

Fee. The license fee must be a reasonable one;[51] but, if the statute providing for the license fee was valid at the time of its enactment, the fact that the fees collected under it are subsequently found to be in excess of that which is necessary to enforce the statute, does not render it invalid.[52] An amendatory act imposing an additional fee has been held to be applicable to licenses issued prior to its passage.[53]

Persons engaged in packing or canning salmon, oysters, etc., may be required to take out a license and to pay a tax based on the amount packed, canned, or sold,[54] although they are caught in, and shipped from, another state.[55] Under such a statute every person, firm, or corporation engaged in canning and packing fish is liable for the poundage fee, irrespective of in whose name the license to can and pack was granted or of whether a license was granted at all.[56] Such an exaction is not a regulatory charge made in the exercise of the state's police power, but is a license or privilege tax on a business or occupation.[57] Under some statutes, the poundage fee on fish packed constitutes a first lien on the cannery, packing plant, boat, and the equipment used in the canning, receiving, or transporting of the fish.[58]

In the absence of a statute providing therefor, a fishing license fee voluntarily paid without protest cannot be recovered back, although assessed and collected without legal authority.[59]

Validity under organic act

(1) The territory cannot impose a license fee on nonresidents which is destructive of the right of citizens of the United States to fish in Alaskan waters as reserved by the organic act.—Freeman v. Smith, C.C.A. Alaska, 44 F.2d 703, certiorari denied Smith v. Freeman, 51 S.Ct. 333, 282 U.S. 904, 75 L.Ed. 796.

(2) A license fee of two hundred and fifty dollars for nonresidents as against a fee of one dollar for residents is accordingly invalid.—Freeman v. Smith, C.C.A.Alaska, 62 F.2d 291—Freeman v. Smith, C.C.A.Alaska, 44 F.2d 703, certiorari denied Smith v. Freeman, 51 S.Ct. 333, 282 U.S. 904, 75 L.Ed. 796.

(3) An annual license fee of twenty-five dollars required of nonresidents is not invalid under such rule.—Anderson v. Smith, C.C.A.Alaska, 71 F.2d 493.

(4) An act imposing taxes on fish traps as a license on fisheries is valid under the organic act.—Alaska Pacific Fisheries v. Territory of Alaska, Alaska, 236 F. 52, 149 C.C.A. 262, certiorari denied 37 S.Ct. 242, 242 U.S. 648, 61 L.Ed. 544, error dismissed 39 S.Ct. 208, 249 U.S. 53, 63 L.Ed. 474.

Application and payment

Under some statutes the application for the license must be made before actually packing the fish and payment is to be made after the packing is done.—Pioneer Packing Co. v. U. S., C.C.A.Alaska, 99 F.2d 547.

License tax for catching and a license tax for canning are a valid exercise of legislative power.—Territory v. Alaska Pacific Fisheries, 5 Alaska 411, affirmed Hoonah Packing Co. v. Territory of Alaska, 236 F. 61, 149 C.C.A. 271.

57. Or.—State ex rel. Veatch v. Franklin, supra.

58. Or.—State ex rel. Veatch v. Franklin, supra.

Proceedings for enforcement

(1) In the absence of statute providing how the lien should be enforced, a general statutory provision as to enforcement of liens authorizes foreclosure proceedings in the name of the state.—State v. Swensk, 89 P. 2d 587, 161 Or. 281.

(2) Such foreclosure cannot be defeated by a claim that equity has no jurisdiction over the subject matter and that an adequate remedy exists at law.—State v. Swensk, supra.

(3) That payment of poundage fees was secured by bonds filed by surety companies did not defeat state's proceeding to foreclose lien, on ground that state was not "real party in interest" and that suit was being prosecuted for benefit of surety companies, where the state had not assigned its claim of liens.—State v. Swensk, supra.

(4) In foreclosure proceedings, it is not incumbent on the state to show that any particular machine of the plant was used in canning or packing the fish on which poundage fees are claimed. It is sufficient that the machinery or equipment was a part of the plant and that the fish on which poundage fees are claimed were packed in such plant.—State v. Swensk, supra.

(5) It is the use of the machinery and equipment, and not its ownership, on which the lien is based. The owner thereof is bound to know that his machinery and equipment are being used in such cannery operation, and that a lien will attach to such property to insure payment of poundage fees, at least where the statute was in existence at the time the property was acquired.—State v. Swensk, supra.

Waiver of lien

(1) The fish commission has no authority as an agency of the state to waive lien.—State v. Swensk, supra.

(2) The acceptance of bonds by state fish commission, to secure payment of poundage fees for fish received or packed by cannery, did not waive state's statutory lien on cannery, for poundage fees, even if commission had power to waive lien.—State v. Swensk, supra.

59. Miss.—Schmittler v. Sunflower County, 125 So. 534, 156 Miss. 227, suggestion of error overruled 126 So. 39, 156 Miss. 227.

Revocation, suspension, or alteration. A license to fish granted by the state is in no sense a contract or property right, and may be revoked by the sovereignty which granted it at its pleasure and without notice,[60] and a person, in accepting a fishing license, takes it subject to the state's right to revoke it.[61] Likewise, the legislature may alter existing fishing licenses and impose new and additional burdens or licenses.[62] In order that a statute operate as a revocation of licenses outstanding under a former statute, an express declaration is not necessary, if such is the obvious intent of the legislature.[63] Under a statute providing that the director of sea and shore fisheries in his discretion may suspend the license of any person whenever he has evidence that such person has violated any of the laws relating to lobsters, notice and hearing are not a condition precedent to suspension of a license to trap lobsters.[64]

The nature and extent of a fishing license depends on the terms of the particular statute under which it is granted, as well as on the terms of the license itself.[65] It may be required to be renewed every year,[66] or may be personal to the licensee and not subject to be exercised by an unlicensed agent.[67] Under some statutes it is a misdemeanor to assign a fishing license without notice to the fish commissioner, and a transfer without giving such notice confers no right on the assignee.[68]

§ 37. Fish Wardens and Other Officers

Statutes frequently provide for the appointment of fish wardens and other officers or administrative bodies, and such officers and bodies may exercise such powers as are conferred on them.

Most fish laws provide for the appointment of special commissioners, committees, wardens, or other officers, and confer powers and duties on them in regard to protecting and regulating the fisheries under their jurisdiction,[69] and also provide for their compensation,[70] and under some statutes a penalty is imposed on any person who opposes such officers or boards in the discharge of their duties.[71]

Although such officers may exercise such powers as are expressly or impliedly conferred on them by statute,[72] they must act strictly within the power

All public waters

The jurisdiction of the fisheries commission board extends to all the public waters of the state or over which it has control, notwithstanding that particular waters are also specified.—State v. Dudley, 109 S.E. 63, 182 N.C. 822.

Composition of commission

Under statute providing that division of game and fish under department of conservation shall be headed by a director and that governor shall appoint advisory game and fish commission of five members, division is not made up of director alone, but is composed of director and five members, although commission is designated as "advisory."—Tipton v. Brown, 126 S.W.2d 1067, 277 Ky. 625.

Function of government

The statute creating a commission of fisheries and relating to conservation of fisheries of tidewater Maryland is in relation to a "governmental function" since conservation of fisheries of tidewater Maryland is a function of government.—Dorsey v. Petrott, 13 A.2d 630, 178 Md. 230.

Purpose of statutes creating the state game and inland fish commission and a commission of fisheries was to abolish the theretofore existing conservation commission and to substitute two separate commissions.—Dorsey v. Petrott, supra.

70. Mich.—Moore v. Wayne County, 51 N.W. 279, 90 Mich. 269.
26 C.J. p 635 note 7.

Fees as compensation

Under a statute providing for the taking of soft fish by seine and providing that such taking must be under the supervision of the game warden or one of his deputies, "without expense to the state," the state game warden cannot be required to account to the state for fees charged for the services of his deputies in such supervision.—State v. Hinshaw, 198 N.W. 634, 197 Iowa 1265.

Profits

Where during war, state officials permitted state game warden to buy fish from fishermen and resell them to people, for profit, on his own risk and with his own funds, the warden could not be required to account to the state for profits, in the absence of fraud or discrimination, although he shipped fish under tags bearing his official title, and wrote letters on official stationery.—State v. Hinshaw, supra.

Authority not terminated

Since game and fish commissioner, in conducting fishing operations, was not agent of commission of public safety, abolishing that commission did not terminate authority of commissioner to conduct fishing operations.—Lipinski v. Gould, 218 N.W. 123, 173 Minn. 559.

Fish guides

Under some statutes a person acting as guide of inland fisheries is liable to a penalty unless he is registered and certified by the commissioners of such fisheries.—State v.

conferred,[73] and they cannot exercise powers which are not expressly or impliedly conferred on them.[74] An administrative body or officer of this character may make reasonable rules and regulations,[75] which, of course, must not conflict with existing legislative enactments;[76] but such a body cannot be

Snowman, 46 A. 815, 94 Me. 99, 80 Am.S.R. 380, 50 L.R.A. 544.

Removal of office

Under some statutes, the tidewater commissioner's office need not be permanently established in fixed place but is removable by game and fish board.—City of Darien v. Clancy, 146 S.E. 767, 167 Ga. 848.

Transfer of funds

In statute providing that a per cent of game and fish funds, not exceeding a certain sum in any fiscal year, may be used in Custer State Park and be paid out on vouchers approved by state park board, word "may" is permissive only and leaves transfer of funds to discretion of game and fish commission.—State ex rel. South Dakota Game and Fish Commission v. O'Neill, 254 N.W. 265, 62 S.D. 522.

Under proper statutory authorization such officers may:

(1) Employ person to oversee commercial seining operations.—Department of Natural Resources, Division of Fish and Game v. Industrial Accident Commission, 14 P.2d 746, 216 Cal. 434.

(2) Establish and maintain a fish hatchery.—Cannon v. Montgomery, 192 S.E. 206, 184 Ga. 588.

(3) Exercise other powers see 26 C.J. p 635 note 10–p 636 note 20.

73. Or.—Monroe v. Withycombe, 165 P. 227, 84 Or. 328.

26 C.J. p 636 note 23.

Certificates of sanitary condition

Commissioners of shellfisheries are not confined in issuing certificates of sanitary condition to places where shellfish are sold since shellfish might have been obtained from polluted areas.—Meunier v. Commissioners of Shell Fisheries, 168 A. 907, 54 R.I. 12.

Extending prohibition

The statutory provision, prohibiting sale of "bass" in state, regardless of where taken, evinced legislative intent to confine prohibition to sale of bass only and not to delegate to any administrative agency, such as state conservation department, authority to extend prohibition to other game fish, such as bream and crappies, taken in waters without state.—State v. Vaughan, 4 So. 2d 9, 241 Ala. 628, denying certiorari, App., 4 So.2d 5.

Statutory facts

Where a statute authorizes a certain finding by the commission, based on certain existing material facts, an order made by the commission which does not rest on such authority is a nullity.—Van Camp Sea Food Co. v. Newbert, 244 P. 946, 76 Cal.App. 445.

74. Acquisition of property

Statutes being silent on whether fish and game commission had power of eminent domain for purpose of condemning site for fish rearing pond, and statutory powers of commission being exercisable without resort to condemnation, it was presumed that legislature intended necessary property should be acquired by contract.—State v. Aitchison, 30 P.2d 805, 96 Mont. 335.

Buying fish

Statutes did not authorize game and fish commissioner to buy fish for purpose of reselling them, and a complaint seeking to enjoin game and fish commissioner from buying and reselling fish in open market was good against demurrer.—Lipinski v. Gould, 218 N.W. 123, 173 Minn. 559.

Depositary of funds

The director of the department of conservation was required to collect from county, city, and village clerks proceeds of fees, fines, and penalties collected by them pursuant to fish and game codes and turn them over to the state treasurer, and it was no part of his duties to select a depositary for those funds.—People, by Barrett, v. Bradford, 22 N.E.2d 691, 372 Ill. 63.

Wis.—Olson v. State Conservation Commission, 293 N.W. 262, 235 Wis. 473.

26 C.J. p 636 note 24.

Hearings and determination of facts

(1) Granting power to fish and game commission to hold hearings and determine facts incidental to regulation of fishing and to grant permits to take and use fish is valid as administrative or regulatory power.—Globe Cotton Oil Mills v. Zellerbach, 252 P. 1038, 200 Cal. 276—People v. Glenn-Colusa Irr. Dist., 15 P.2d 549, 127 Cal.App. 30.

(2) The fish and game commission cannot be invested with judicial functions under some state constitutions.—Van Camp Sea Food Co. v. State Fish and Game Commission, 243 P. 702, 75 Cal.App. 764, followed in Stafford Packing Co. v. Fish and Game Commission of State of California, 243 P. 704, 75 Cal.App. 790, Pacific Marine Products Co. v. Fish and Game Commission of State of California, 243 P. 705, 75 Cal.App. 791, Southern California Fish Corporation v. Fish and Game Commission of State of California, 243 P. 705, 75 Cal.App. 793, and Franco-Italian Packing Co. v. Fish and Game Commission of State of California, 243 P. 705, 75 Cal.App. 794.

Constitutionality of statutes conferring judicial power on executive officers see Constitutional Law § 173.

Intent of rule

Conservation commission rule that artificially propagated trout must be tagged is intended to protect fish of commonwealth and to prevent waste of natural resources to detriment of the general public.—Grossman v. Hotel Astor, 1 N.Y.S.2d 307, 166 Misc. 80.

Procedure

Where no rules of procedure have been prescribed by statute, the administrative body is free to make its own, provided they are fair and reasonable.—Coggeshall v. Harbor Commission, 146 A. 482, 50 R.I. 175.

Trial of basis of order

Authorized administrative orders, auxiliary to purely police legislation touching no private rights, are no more open to trial of the conditions or facts on which they are based than the legislation authorizing them.—People v. Soule, 213 N.W. 195, 238 Mich. 130.

Wide discretion

The legislature has given the board of fish commissioners a wide discretion as to the administration of laws for the encouragement, promotion, and development of fishery interests, and the protection, propagation, and distribution of fish.—Weindorf v. French, 39 Pa.Dist. & Co. 65, 49 Dauph.Co. 49.

76. Ga.—Creed v. State, 159 S.E. 291, 43 Ga.App. 479.

Penalty

Regulations of the conservation commission fixing size of fish nets to be used by licensed commercial fishermen in outlying waters of the state were not invalid on claimed ground that commission changed the prior law with respect to commercial fishing and indirectly changed the penalty, since statute specifically provides that the commission cannot alter penalty provisions.—Olson v. State Conservation Commission, 293 N.W. 262, 235 Wis. 473.

vested with authority to make rules and regulations which constitute an exercise of exclusive legislative powers.[77] In making rules and regulations, the administrative body must not be arbitrary or unreasonable [78] or discriminatory.[79]

The powers given to a committee under some statutes must be exercised by a majority of them.[80]

In the absence of fraud or corruption the acts and decisions of such officers or boards, in regard to matters within their powers, cannot be reviewed in a collateral proceeding,[81] and even on a direct proceeding, such act or decision will not be disturbed where the facts and circumstances warrant it.[82] It will be assumed that a fish and game commission will exercise its discretionary power in consonance with the legitimate objects toward which the legislation was aimed.[83]

Where injury results to an individual from negligent or unnecessary and unreasonable action on the part of an officer or board, he has a remedy by an action at law therefor.[84] A state game warden cannot be required to account to the state for funds, voluntarily contributed by fishermen, which were to be used, and which were used, to improve the various public waters in the state for fishing purposes.[85] A state fish commission cannot be required by court order to make an order not within its powers.[86]

Appointment and removal. Under a statute authorizing the commissioner of fisheries to appoint competent citizens as fish wardens, an appointment of a fish warden as shown by a card from the fish commissioner is sufficient authority for him to act as such.[87] Under some statutes, the office of county fish warden is a county office, and cannot be filled by an appointment.[88] Where the statute is silent as to the manner of filling the office after initial appointment, it should be filled in the same manner as the initial filling.[89]

Under some statutes, fish wardens or commissioners are removable by the appointing power,[90] and under particular statutes, this removal is at the pleasure of the appointing power.[91] Under a statute authorizing removal for cause, whenever the executive proposes to act on charges involving malfeasance, misfeasance, or nonfeasance in office, or which directly reflect on the official or personal integrity of the incumbent, notice and an opportunity to disprove the charges is necessary.[92] An attempt to justify a removal by a showing of cause therefor is unavailing, as an ex post facto showing of cause cannot cure failure to give the necessary notice of hearing on such charges.[93]

Bond. Under some statutes a state game, fish, and oyster commissioner is required to give bond that he will faithfully perform his duties. The commissioner, as principal, and the sureties on his bond are charged with notice of his powers, duties, and liabilities for the wrongful use of his official authority, and the legal effect of his undertaking.[94] Sureties on the bond of a fish commissioner or warden are not liable for his breaches of duty which are not covered by the terms of his bond.[95]

Making information public. The purpose of a statutory provision prohibiting the fish commission from making public certain information received from packers of fish is to prevent annoyance and injury to those in the industry through exposure of their private business affairs.[96]

§ 38. Penalties

The penalties which may be imposed for a violation of the fish laws are a matter of statutory regulation.

The penalties which may be recovered or imposed for violations of the fish laws are generally prescribed by such laws [97] which must not violate constitutional provisions against excessive fines and punishment.[98] These statutes usually provide for a specified fine or imprisonment or both;[99] or for the seizure and sale of vessels or appliances used in violation of such laws, see infra § 42. Before a penalty can be recovered there must be a strict compliance with all the duties enjoined on those claiming it.[1]

The person who may be entitled to enforce a penalty is a matter of statutory regulation. Any matter which defeats the right to enforce the penalty is available as a defense.

The person entitled to recover a penalty for a violation of the fish laws is determined from the language and intent of such laws.[2] Under some statutes an action or prosecution to recover the penalty may be brought by a common informer in his own name,[3] or by the district attorney at the instance of the fish and game warden or other officer or committee,[4] and under other statutes it can be instituted only by such officer or committee.[5] In the absence of statutory authority in a local body or officer, a violation which is merely a matter between the state and the guilty parties can be prosecuted by the state alone;[6] and not by a private individual.[7] A complaint, in a prosecution by a grand juror, for trespassing on another's land for the purpose of fishing, need not be brought at the request of the owner of the land; nor does it affect the case that the person described in the complaint as the owner of the land had leased the right of fishing to another.[8] Under some statutes, however, an action of debt for a penalty for catching fish in another's pond can be maintained only by the owner or lessee of the land under or around the pond.[9]

Defenses. Anything which defeats the right to recover the penalty may be set up in defense.[10] Where, under the statute, in order for a person to be guilty of the violation subjecting him to the penalty, he must have acted knowingly, the absence of such knowledge is available as a defense.[11] The fact that defendant had caught no fish is a defense to an action for a penalty for failure to report fish caught under a license to fish.[12] It is no defense to an action to recover a penalty under the fish laws that searches and seizures of forfeited property under such laws were not made in the manner prescribed thereby,[13] or that there has been a criminal prosecution for the same offense,[14] especially where such prosecution was a nullity, and not a real prosecution.[15] One penalty only may be recovered for the same offense,[16] and where several join in committing it, a recovery and satisfaction against one of the offenders has been held to be a bar to an action brought against the other; but if they were acting severally, each on his own account, it has been held that they would be severally liable for the penalty, and a recovery from one would not bar a judgment against the other.[17]

§ 40. —— Remedies and Proceedings for Enforcement

A civil action is usually the proper proceeding to enforce a penalty for a violation of the fish laws.

A proceeding to recover a penalty for violation of the fish laws is ordinarily a civil, rather than a criminal, proceeding.[18] Under the various fish laws, a qui tam action at the instance of an informer,[19] or an action of debt,[20] has been held to be a proper remedy. Under some statutes, however, a proceeding by an indictment[21] or a complaint[22] is a proper remedy to enforce such a penalty.

Pleading. The rules which govern the pleadings and proof in actions for penalties generally apply in an action to recover a penalty for a violation of the fish laws.[23] The declaration or complaint should charge the offense at least substantially in the terms of the statute imposing the penalty.[24] It must also show that the person seeking to maintain the action is clearly within the provision of the statute,[25] and must not violate the rules against duplicity.[26] Intent must generally be directly alleged where it is the essence of the particular offense,[27] but not where it can be inferred from the act charged.[28] A material variance between the pleadings and proof is fatal.[29]

Evidence. The person who claims the penalty must show every fact necessary to constitute the offense alleged, and which will entitle him to the penalty;[30] but where possession of prohibited fish during the close season is once shown, it is, under some statutes, prima facie proof of a violation of the statute, and casts on the possessor the burden of showing that his possession is lawful.[31] The rules which govern in ordinary civil actions apply to the admissibility,[32] and weight and sufficiency[33] of the evidence in an action for a penalty under the fish laws. The guilt of defendant need not be proved beyond a reasonable doubt, a preponderance of the evidence being sufficient.[34]

Trial and judgment. The usual rules of procedure which relate to trial in civil actions generally apply in this case of actions,[35] such as that the verdict must be in accordance with the evidence and pleadings.[36] The judgment must follow the pleadings and proof, and a material variance therefrom is fatal.[37] Under some statutes, the judgment for the penalty may be enforced by execution against the person of defendant,[38] or by making it a lien on the vessel engaged in the unlawful fishing.[39]

Review. Where a statute prescribes the exact form of convictions under the fish and game law, in a proceeding before a justice of peace to recover a penalty for violation of such law, where neither the prescribed form nor court rule require the justice to return the evidence as part of his transcript, a return of such evidence is not a part of the record, and will not be considered by the court on certiorari.[40]

§ 41. —— Disposition of Proceeds

The disposition of the proceeds of a penalty for a violation of the fish laws is a matter of statutory regulation.

Under the various statutes, the penalties recovered are to be devoted to a certain fund,[41] or to be paid over to certain commissioners or officers,[42] or the proceeds thereof divided in specified proportions between the state, or some local branch thereof, and the informer or officer securing the apprehension and conviction of the offender.[43]

§ 42. Searches, Seizures, and Forfeitures

Appliances used in violation of the fishing laws usually, under the various statutes, may be seized and forfeited; and, under some statutes, at least if the appliances are of small value, they may be summarily taken or destroyed.

Under some statutes nets, seines, and other appliances used in violation of the laws regulating and protecting fish and fishing rights,[44] and also the fish which are unlawfully taken or possessed,[45] may by proper proceedings be searched for, seized and destroyed, or sold by the fish warden, or other proper officer, unless the appliances were used pursuant to licenses presumably issued in good faith.[46]

A vessel used or employed in violation of the fish or oyster laws may, under some statutes, be seized and searched, and after proper proceedings be declared forfeited and destroyed or sold,[47] although

"Designed" use
Under a statute providing for the forfeiture of any device or apparatus designed to be, and capable of being, used to take fish, and which was used in committing the offense, rowboats, outboard motor, oars, coats, and motor tools used in connection with catching fish with set line, were "devices" or "apparatus" "designed" to be, and capable of being, used to take fish which were subject to forfeiture when used in an illegal operation of set line, notwithstanding that such property was not designed and manufactured for catching fish with a set line, the intent of the manufacturer being immaterial.—Bruce v. Sibeck, 78 P.2d 741, 25 Cal.App.2d 691.

Duty of officers
Officers in whose presence arrestees were illegally engaged in fishing with set line had duty to arrest such persons and take possession of property being used in commission of the offense and see that it was safely cared for until the time of trial as against contention that arrest and seizure of property was unlawful; and they had the duty to take possession of boats in the possession of such persons for safekeeping in order to prevent escape and loss of boats not only to persons arrested but also to the right of the state to forfeiture thereof.—Bruce v. Sibeck, supra.

Power of state legislature
The infliction of the penalty of seizure and forfeiture of a vessel for a violation of valid regulations for the operation of such vessel is within the power of the state legislature.—Mirkovich v. Milnor, D.C.Cal., 34 F.Supp. 409.

Seizure of vessel for violation of fisheries law, effected by warden posting notice stating that vessel was seized and warning all persons

the owner is not implicated in the offense, and the vessel is so employed without his knowledge or consent;[48] and the seizure may be made after the illegal transaction, although the vessel is not at the time engaged in an illegal act.[49] Under some statutes, however, a vessel cannot be seized and sold for fishing on private grounds;[50] and it has been held, that, where the sole purpose of such statute is to regulate private interests, and enforce private rights of a particular class of persons, it cannot be justified under the police power of the state.[51]

Under some statutes, the validity of which have been upheld, there may be a summary taking or destruction of nets, seines, and other appliances of small value used in violation of the statutes.[52] Under other statutes, although there may be a seizure of a vessel or an appliance without a warrant,[53] the destruction or confiscation can be made only after proper judicial proceedings,[54] within the time fixed by statute, or if no time is fixed, within a reasonable time after the seizure;[55] and it has been held that the legislature cannot authorize the confiscation or destruction, especially where the property is of great value, without such a hearing.[56] A statute, providing that fishing equipment illegally used shall be forfeited and shall be seized and sold under the direction of the court in which the forfeiture is declared, contemplates an executive seizure, and the phrase "under the direction of the court" means that only the sale shall be made under the direction of the court.[57]

Judicial proceedings for the confiscation of fishing appliances used illegally are civil in nature.[58] Under some statutes providing that appliances used illegally in fishing "shall" be confiscated to the state, on a finding that the appliances were being so illegally used, the court must order such confiscation, and it has no discretion in the matter.[59] The conviction of a fisherman for fishing without a license, being a proceeding in personam, does not operate as a forfeiture of a vessel used by him, since the procedure therefor is in rem.[60] Under a stat-to keep off, was sufficient to give court jurisdiction to enforce forfeiture, notwithstanding captain was thereafter allowed to sleep on vessel. —The M. & M., 8 Alaska 17.

Nuisance per se

(1) Mere possession of trap and gill nets is not a nuisance per se, but the legislature may decree that possession under certain circumstances is a public nuisance and authorize summary abatement.—Allen v. Mather, 30 N.Y.S.2d 76, affirmed 30 N.Y.S. 2d 112, 262 App.Div. 940.

(2) Under Conservation Law, which must be strictly construed, the provision that any net prohibited by law to be possessed, set, or used in any waters of the state or the shores or islands thereof, is declared to be a public nuisance and may be seized, abated, and destroyed by any game protector, two elements are essential to constitute a "public nuisance," first, the net must be prohibited by law, and secondly it must be possessed, set, or used in any waters of the state or the shores or islands thereof,—Allen v. Mather, supra.

In New York, under Conservation Law provision authorizing seizure and abatement of any net prohibited by law to be possessed, set, or used in any waters of the state or shores or islands thereof, special game protector did not have authority under a warrant, authorizing search of owner's dwelling, to seize fishtrap nets found in owner's barn.—Allen v. Mather, 30 N.Y.S.2d 76, affirmed 30 N.Y.S.2d 112, 262 App.Div. 940.

Petition alleging that a purse seine net "is and was at all times herein mentioned an appliance used for the taking of fish" and was used in violation of specified section of Fish and Game Code, constituted a sufficient allegation that net was illegally used to catch fish so as to state a cause of action for forfeiture of net.—Moore v. Purse Seine Net, 118 P.2d 1, 18 Cal.2d 835, prior opinion 105 P.2d 919, prior opinion, App., 98 P.2d 766.

Illegality of seine

Whether seine is legal or illegal mesh, licensed or unlicensed, is question of fact for court, and conservation agents cannot determine whether seines used are of illegal mesh, licensed or unlicensed.—Nugent v. McCurdy, 6 La.App. 615.

Process

Judgment refusing to forfeit fisherman's boat for fishing during closed season on petition by fishing inspector for forfeiture was void, where no service was had.—State v. Fishing Appliances, 16 P.2d 822, 170 Wash. 426.

57. Alaska.—U. S. v. One Floating Fish Trap, 7 Alaska 334.

58. Appeal

(1) State may appeal from an adverse final order.—State v. Cramer, 8 P.2d 1004, 167 Wash. 159.

(2) Where order, providing for forfeiture of fishing devices unlawfully used, allowed owner thirty days from entry of the order to assert ownership of the property, and ownership was not asserted until after expiration of that period, the judge was without power to reopen the order which had become a "final judgment." —Bruce v. Malloy, Fla., 7 So.2d 123.

59. Conclusion that confiscation would be unjust was not binding on appellate court, although state failed to except to such finding.—State v. Mavrikas, 269 P. 805, 148 Wash. 651.

ute providing that, when any illegal or illegally used fishing device is found in the waters of the state, and the owner thereof shall not be known to the officer finding the same, such officer shall immediately procure an order forfeiting such device, where the owner of the device escaped and was not apprehended by the officer, the conviction of the owner of the device is not a condition precedent to a forfeiture thereof.[61]

Under some statutes, the procedure for the condemnation and sale of boats, seines, nets, and traps employed in violation of the fish laws is required to be under the rules of admiralty.[62] Under an admiralty rule providing that all informations and libels of information on seizures for any breach of the laws of the United States shall state the place of seizure, whether it be on land, or on the high seas, or on navigable waters within the admiralty and maritime jurisdiction of the United States and the district within which the property is brought and where it then is, a libel of information not containing such requisites must be dismissed.[63] It has been held that, before the court will allow a release of the res under stipulation, as permitted by admiralty rules, either an affidavit of merits must accompany the application for appraisement and release, or a petition for a hearing before the court, to determine from the facts produced whether there is reasonable cause to believe that there is a defense on the merits, a mere statement by claimant that he believes he has a good defense being insufficient.[64] After a vessel is brought into the custody of the United States marshal by proper admiralty process, any irregularity in the initial seizure is immaterial and waived by the filing of a claim or answer.[65] To authorize a condemnation of property seized by the administrative officers as forfeited, the evidence of a violation of the law must be clear and convincing, although proof beyond a reasonable doubt is not necessary.[66]

Liability for wrongful seizure. A person whose property is illegally seized may replevy it from the officer seizing it,[67] or, if it has been illegally destroyed, he may have an action for its value.[68] In such case, the burden is on defendant to prove a justification,[69] and the officer cannot justify his acts under a statute which has been repealed.[70] A deputy fish commissioner who arrests a person on the charge of illegal fishing and, as authorized by statute, seizes the boat and net so employed is not personally liable for seizure of the evidence.[71] He is responsible, however, for the care of the property while in his custody, and he may be required to respond in damages for injury resulting to it by reason of his negligence.[72] Where a fish warden acted in good faith in seizing fishing appliances which he considered were being operated in violation of law, it has been held that he was not liable to puni-

Conversion

(1) Officer illegally seizing crabs was guilty of conversion, and plaintiff was entitled to their market value at the time of seizure, with interest. —Silva v. MacAuley, 26 P.2d 887, 135 Cal.App. 249, rehearing denied 27 P.2d 791, 135 Cal.App. 249.

(2) Where seizure of fishtrap nets by special game protector was illegal from its inception, so that conversion was accomplished at the time of seizure, demand for return of trap nets was not "condition precedent" to an action for conversion.—Allen v. Mather, 30 N.Y.S.2d 76, affirmed 30 N.Y.S.2d 112, 262 App.Div. 940.

Erroneous holding of guilt

Deputy fish and game commissioners' liability for illegal seizure of plaintiffs' crabs was not affected by fact that justice of peace, after seizure, erroneously held plaintiffs' truck driver guilty of misdemeanor in transporting crabs.—Silva v. MacAuley, 26 P.2d 887, 135 Cal.App. 249, rehearing denied 27 P.2d 791, 135 Cal. App. 249.

Individual liability

Liability of deputy fish and game commissioners acting alone in illegal seizure of truckload of crabs, was individual and personal.—Silva v. MacAuley, supra.

Value

To prove compensatory damages, it is proper to prove the value of the articles seized when they were purchased and to prove the time when they were purchased, so as to show what the reasonable depreciation, if any, would be.—Lilly v. Bronson, 177 So. 218, 129 Fla. 675.

Where a state deputy fisheries commissioner arrested owner of fishing net and boat on charge of illegal fishing and seized net and boat, and net was cleaned and stored and boat was placed in a loft, and, following dismissal of charge against owner, net and boat were tendered to her and tender was rejected, owner was not entitled to recover under evidence for alleged loss of fishing net and boat on ground that net and boat tendered to her were not in as good condition as at time of seizure.—Douglas v. Mack, supra.

tive or exemplary damages.[73]

§ 43. Criminal Prosecutions

Prosecutions for violations of fish laws must be in accordance with the governing statutes.

The question of criminal liability and prosecutions for a violation of the fish laws depends on the language of the particular statute, and the prosecution must proceed in accordance with the governing statute,[74] including the court before which the prosecution should be brought [75] and the person or officer who may or must institute the proceedings.[76] Such offenses are rendered indictable under some statutes by a refusal to pay the penalty assessed by the magistrate or justice of the peace.[77] Parties concurring in a violation of the statute may be prosecuted together.[78] A proceeding to deprive a person of a fishing privilege granted by the state is not, in its nature, criminal, so as to make an order to produce papers against the owner thereof unconstitutional.[79]

§ 44. —— Indictment, Information, or Complaint

An indictment, information, or complaint should allege with certainty all the essential elements of the offense.

An indictment, information, or complaint, for a violation of the fish laws should allege with certainty [80] all the essential elements of the offense defined by the statute under which it is drawn,[81] including, where this is essential, the time and place of the offense.[82] An indictment or complaint charging the offense in the language of the statute,[83] or in the language of the statute and regulation which defines it,[84] is ordinarily sufficient; but the precise words of the statute need not be employed if words of like import are used, and all the facts which constitute the offense are stated.[85] Matters which are unnecessary and are mere surplusage need not be averred.[86] Exceptions and provisos which form a part of the definition of the offense must be negatived,[87] but other exceptions, whether contained in the same or other statutes, which are mere matters of defense need not be anticipated and negatived by allegations in the indictment or complaint.[88] The indictment or complaint should not charge defendant disjunctively or alternatively in such a manner as to leave it uncertain as to what is relied on as the accusation against him.[89]

Issues, proof, and variance. Questions relating to the issues, proof, and variance in a prosecution for a violation of the fish laws are governed by the rules which apply in criminal prosecutions generally.[90] In accordance with such rules the offense must be proved as charged,[91] and defendant is entitled to an acquittal if there is a material variance between the allegations in the indictment or complaint and the proof as to some matter which is legally essential to the charge;[92] but not where there is no variance or it is an immaterial one.[93] Where a person prosecuted for unlawful fishing admits the use of an unlawful device, he cannot at the same time contend that the statute forbidding such device was not violated because the fish taken were not game or food fish.[94]

§ 45. —— Evidence

The rules as to evidence applicable to criminal cases generally are applicable to prosecutions for violations of fish laws.

Except in so far as governed by special statute,[95] the rules of evidence which govern in criminal prosecutions generally, apply in a prosecution for a violation of the fish laws,[96] as to burden of proof,[97] presumptions,[98] and the admissibility,[99] and weight and sufficiency [1] of the evidence. As in other criminal prosecutions, in order to convict defendant, the jury must be satisfied from the evidence, beyond a reasonable doubt, of his guilt,[2] and this may be es-

Dead fish
Where defendant assisted in draining pond for purpose of taking fish in violation of statute, fish which died because of lack of water were "taken" by defendant within statute, and hence admission of evidence tending to show number of fish which died from lack of water after pond was drained was not error.—State v. Searles, 184 A. 701, 108 Vt. 236.

tablished by circumstantial evidence.[3] Where a prima facie case is made out against defendant, as where, under some statutes, he is shown to have had possession of prohibited fish,[4] or an illegal device,[5] the burden is on him to adduce evidence of his matters of defense.[6]

§ 46. —— Trial, Punishment, and Review

The general rules as to trial in criminal cases are applicable. Statutes denouncing fish offenses usually prescribe the punishment therefor, but, in the absence of such provision, the general statutes providing for the punishment of offenses are applicable.

The rules which govern trials in other criminal cases apply to the trial of a criminal prosecution for a violation of the fish laws, such as with regard to the instructions,[7] questions of law and fact,[8] and the verdict and findings.[9] In the absence of a necessity for special findings the verdict may be general,[10] and special findings when given are not conclusive unless responsive.[11]

Punishment. The punishment for violations of the fish laws is generally prescribed by the statutes creating the offenses;[12] but even independently of such statutes defendant may be committed until payment of a fine as in other prosecutions.[13] Where the fish law prescribes no punishment,[14] or where the punishment therein prescribed is invalid,[15] defendant may be punished under a general statute relating to offenses of the same grade.

FISHERY. See Fish § 1.

FISHGARTH. A dam or weir in a river for taking fish.[1]

FISTULA. A reed; a pipe.[6] In the civil law, a pipe for conveying water.[7] In the pathological sense, a narrow passage or duct, formed by disease or injury, leading from an abscess to a free surface, or furnishing an abnormal means of egress from some normal cavity, as in vesicovaginal fistula.[8]

FIT.

As a Noun

Adaptedness; adjustment; the quality, state, or manner of being fitted, as of dress to the wearer.[9] In medical jurisprudence, a stroke of disease; a sudden and violent attack of a disorder;[10] an attack or spasm of muscular convulsions, generally attended with loss of self-control and of consciousness; particularly, such attacks as occur in epilepsy; also, in a more general sense, the period of an acute attack of any disease, physical or mental, as, a fit of insanity.[11] Also, in the plural, a laymen's term for epilepsy.[12]

As a Verb

Furnishing a thing suitable for the use of another; to furnish with things proper or necessary; to make suitable; to prepare.[13] In its preterit form, the word has been held synonymous with "calculated"[14] and "capable" see 12 C.J.S. p 1115 note 24.

Fitting. In the participial form, the word has been held synonymous with "capable" see 12 C.J.S. p 1115 note 24. Used as a verbal noun, the common understanding of the term is anything employed in fitting up permanently, used generally in the plural, in the sense of fixtures, tackle, apparatus, equipment; anything used in fitting up, especially, in the plural, necessary fixtures or apparatus;[15] auxiliary parts, as of a boiler, or the small separately made parts of a machine; the fittings of a room; gas fittings; bicycle fittings.[16] In a particular context, the term has been held not to include furniture.[17]

Phrases employing the word are set out in the note.[18] For other phrases employing the word as to which more recent American adjudications have not been found see 26 C.J. p 646 notes 36–42.

As an Adjective

It has been said that the term was anciently defined as in correspondence with some other thing,[19] but that in modern times it is properly used to import a number of shades of meaning,[20] under particular circumstances having the significance either of an existing capacity or of a capacity that may be consummated by further action.[21] In modern use, it has been defined as meaning adapted to an end, object or design; suitable by nature or by art; suited by character, qualities, circumstances, education, etc., qualified; competent; worthy;[22] adequate; conformed to a standard of duty or taste; congruous.[23] It has also been defined or construed

FIX.

In General

A word variously defined as meaning to decide definitely, to settle;[45] to determine;[46] to direct without variation;[47] to establish invariably;[48] to fasten;[49] to fasten immovably; to make firm, stable, or fast; to set or place permanently;[50] to give permanence to something, especially as it already exists;[51] to make permanent something that is unsettled;[52] to make sure;[53] to name;[54] to secure from displacement;[55] to settle permanently.[56]

The word is sometimes used in a broad sense and sometimes in a narrow sense.[57] It is sometimes used in the sense of "allow,"[58] and the right to "fix" may include the right to "increase," although the ordinary meaning of "fix" is to make permanent something that is unsettled.[59] While, properly speaking, it does not mean "pay," it is not infrequently used to convey such meaning.[60] The term implies finality, and, in the absence of qualifying words, precludes the idea of variableness or alteration.[61] In a particular connection, it may imply the establishment of a definite rate,[62] but the power to "fix" does not include the power to fix a fee at one time and arbitrarily to change it at another where contract rights are involved.[63]

The term has been held equivalent to, or synonymous with, "adjust,"[64] "confirm,"[65] "declare" see 26 C.J.S. p 40 note 12, "define" see 26 C.J.S. p 678 note 97, "delimit," "determine," "limit," "place," "set,"[66] and "settle;"[67] and has been compared

Fixed

A term of no technical significance,[71] which imports certainty and definiteness both as to obligation and amount,[72] denotes predetermination, establishment, and a degree of constancy and invariability which excludes subservience alone to mere occasion,[73] and has been defined as meaning established; firm;[74] fastened;[75] finally determined upon;[76] immovable; securely placed; unalterable;[77] lasting;[78] liquidated or rendered certain;[79] of an established, unchanging, permanent character;[80] settled.[81] Sometimes it is used in the sense of "allowed."[82] In shipping, the term is sometimes roughly used as equivalent to "closed," "not free," and "tied up."[83]

"Fixed" as excluding grace see Bills and notes § 257.

The term has been held synonymous with "estimated" see 31 C.J.S. p 184 note 62, and "settled;"[84] and has been distinguished from "definite" see 26 C.J.S. p 679 note 25, "inchoate," or "in the process of becoming."[85]

§ 1. Definition and Nature and Requisites of Conversion into Realty in General

In general, fixtures are articles which were personalty but which by being annexed to realty are regarded as a part thereof. They retain their identity, partake of the character and properties of realty, and ordinarily belong to the owner of the real estate. What constitutes a fixture depends on the facts and circumstances of the particular case, including the relationship of the parties, and is determined by the united application of the requisites, annexation, adaptation, and intention. The law of the jurisdiction in which the real estate is located controls.

The law recognizes that, under certain circumstances personal property becomes a part and parcel of real property and thereafter assumes the status of real property.[1] In fact it is an ancient maxim, which in the language of antiquity is expressed "quicquid plantatur solo, solo cedit,"[2] that whatsoever is fixed to the realty is thereby made a part of the realty to which it adheres, and partakes of all its incidents and properties.[3] The term "fixture" is applied to articles of the nature of personal property which have been affixed to land [4] and which retain their separate identity.[5] However, in the definition of the term there is confusion among the authorities.[6] In a few jurisdictions it is held that a fixture is an article which, although annexed to the realty, is nevertheless removable at the option of the person who annexed it,[7] and in such states a fixture is not a part of the real estate unless there are facts that bring about that result.[8] Other jurisdictions hold that the term "fixtures" may be deemed to embrace all those chattels which, by reason of their annexation to the land, partake both of the nature of personalty and realty, irrespective of the question whether or not they are removable.[9] By the great weight of authority, however, a fixture is a thing which, although originally a movable chattel, is, by reason of its annexation to land, regarded as a part of the land.[10] In some jurisdictions statutes affect the question as to whether or

Difficult to define

It is difficult, if not impossible, to give a definition of the term "fixtures" which may be regarded of universal application.—Holy Ghost Catholic Church of Two Harbors v. Clinton, 211 N.W. 13, 169 Minn. 253.

7. Iowa.—Titus Loan & Investment Co. v. Natural Gas Pipe Line Co. of America, 274 N.W. 68, 223 Iowa 944.
26 C.J. p 652 note 3.

Other definition

Fixtures are chattel property brought in and on and annexed to real property, which retain their separate identity and become realty, but which may under certain circumstances become personalty again.—Frost v. Schinkel, 238 N.W. 659, 121 Neb. 784, 77 A.L.R. 1381.

8. Iowa.—Titus Loan & Investment Co. v. Natural Gas Pipe Line Co. of America, 274 N.W. 68, 223 Iowa 944.

9. Ga.—Burpee v. Athens Production Credit Ass'n, 15 S.E.2d 526, 65 Ga.App. 102.

Nature

Under this definition a chattel is made to partake of the nature of both personalty and realty, depending on the way in which it was affixed or attached to the realty, the circumstances under which it was attached, and the parties at issue; and thus chattels which are attached to realty may partake to some extent of incidents peculiar to personalty and in other incidents partake of the nature and characteristics of realty.—Burpee v. Athens Production Credit Ass'n, supra.

Reason for term

It is primarily because of the dual character of chattels so attached under varying circumstances, as not to lose their identity, that a reason exists for a distinct term by which such chattels may be designated as "fixtures" to distinguish them on the one hand from mere personal property and on the other hand from mere realty.—Burpee v. Athens Production Credit Ass'n, supra.

Other definitions

(1) A fixture is an article which was a chattel, but which, by being physically annexed or affixed to the realty, became accessory to, and a part and parcel of, it.
Ariz.—Fechet v. Drake, 12 P. 694, 695, 2 Ariz. 239.
Or.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Kimball, 94 P.2d 1101, 163 Or. 31.

(2) The term "fixture," as generally understood, is property originally a personal chattel which has been affixed to the soil or to some structure legally a part of the soil, and which, being physically attached or affixed to the realty, has become a part of the realty.—Continental Gin Co. v. Clement, 4 S.W.2d 901, 902, 176 Ark. 864.

(3) An article which was a chattel, but which, by being physically annexed or affixed to the realty by some one having an interest in the soil, becomes part and parcel of it.
Fla.—Commercial Finance Co. v. Brooksville Hotel Co., 123 So. 814, 98 Fla. 410, 64 A.L.R. 1219.
Ill.—Material Service Corporation v. McKibbin, 43 N.E.2d 939, 380 Ill. 226.

(4) A "fixture" is an original chattel which has been physically annexed or affixed to the realty with the purpose and intention of making it part and parcel of such realty, and which may not be removed without injury to the freehold.—Greenwald v. Graham, 130 So. 608, 100 Fla. 818.

(5) A "fixture" is property which was a chattel but which has been so affixed to realty for a combined functional use that it has become part and parcel of it.—Holland Furnace Co. v. Trumbull Savings & Loan Co., 19 N.E.2d 273, 135 Ohio St. 48.

(6) A fixture is anything annexed to the freehold.—Fechet v. Drake, 12 P. 694, 695, 2 Ariz. 239.

(7) An article of a personal nature affixed to the freehold.—Merritt v. Judd, 14 Cal. 59, 64, quoting 2 Kent. Comm. p 344.

(8) Things fixed in a greater or less degree to the realty.—Fechet v. Drake, 12 P. 694, 695, 2 Ariz. 239, quoting 2 Kent.Comm. p 345 note a.

Derivation of term

The term "fixture" is derived from the Latin "affixum."—Burpee v. Athens Production Credit Ass'n, 15 S.E.2d 526, 528, 65 Ga.App. 102.

Immovables

(1) An immovable by destination was originally a movable and the movable becomes immovable by destination by the act of the owner in placing it on the land for service, etc.—Buchler v. Fourroux, 190 So. 640, 193 La. 445.

(2) There is a vast distinction between immovables by destination and immovables by nature. The status of an immovable by destination can be changed by an act of the landowner, and does change according to its use by the owner, but the status of an immovable by nature cannot be changed by any act of the landowner or any other person.—Buchler v. Fourroux, supra.

(3) In Louisiana, Civ.Code § 468 provides that all such movables as the owner has attached permanently to the building shall be immovable by destination.—Scovel v. Shadyside Co., 69 So. 745, 137 La. 918, Ann.Cas. 1917B, 178.

(4) Terms "immovable by nature" and "immovable by destination" in statutes may be considered interchangeable.—Tangipahoa Bank & Trust Co. v. Kent, C.C.A.La., 70 F.2d 139.

Inclusion within meaning of other terms

(1) Under some statutes it is specifically provided that the terms "real property," "real estate," and not particular articles are fixtures under given circumstances.[11]

Fixtures belong to that class of property which stands on the boundary line between the two grand divisions of things real and things personal, into which the law has classified property.[12] In its ordinary signification the term "fixture" is expressive of the act of annexation;[13] it necessarily implies something having a possible existence apart from realty, but which may, by annexation, be assimilated into realty,[14] and denotes the change which has occurred in the nature and legal incidents of the property.[15] They partake of the character,[16] incidents, and properties [17] of realty, and belong, in the ordinary case at least, to the person or persons owning the land;[18] and, as appears infra §§ 21–22, ordinarily may not be severed and removed without the consent of the owner. However, the incidents of ownership of a fixture are not the same in all respects as the incidents of ownership of land. Thus title to a fixture, unlike title to land, does not carry with it rights of ownership usque ab coelum.[19]

Term used in untechnical sense. The term "fixtures" is occasionally used in an untechnical sense, particularly in private documents or transactions, as when it is applied to an article, not as constituting part of the land, but as constituting merely part of a structure on the land,[20] or when reference is made to "fixtures" with some qualifying expression added,[21] such as gas or electric fixtures, see infra § 45.

Requisites in general. There is great confusion and uncertainty in the decisions as to when an article becomes a fixture to the realty to which it is attached, and so legally a part thereof.[22] The test "land" shall include "fixtures" within their meaning.

Ohio.—Chapman v. First Nat. Bank of Wellington, 47 N.E. 54, 56 Ohio St. 310, affirmed 19 S.Ct. 407, 173 U.S. 205, 43 L.Ed. 669.

(2) The term "improvements" includes, but is a more comprehensive term than, "fixtures."—Cullitan v. Standard Oil Co., Ohio App., 34 N.E. 2d 256, 258—31 C.J. p 262 notes 93 [a], 95, p 308 note 9—36 C.J. p 178 note 7.

(3) The word "stock" cannot be deemed to include fixtures.—St. Regis Restaurant v. Powers, 216 N.Y.S. 129, 127 Misc. 338, reversed on other grounds 219 N.Y.S. 684, 219 App.Div. 321.

(4) Fixtures as not included in chattel mortgage of stock in trade see Chattel Mortgages § 126.

(5) Fixtures as not included in terms "household utensils" subject to customs duties see Customs Duties § 34.

Trade fixtures

(1) "Fixtures," as distinguished from movable trade fixtures, means chattels annexed to realty.—Holy Ghost Catholic Church of Two Harbors v. Clinton, 211 N.W. 13, 169 Minn. 253.

(2) The general principle involved in determining whether an article is a "trade fixture" is the distinction between the business which is carried on on the premises and the premises themselves; the former is personal, and articles that are merely accessory to the business and have been put on the premises for this purpose retain the personal character of the principal, to which they are subservient, but articles which have been annexed to the premises as accessory to the land without regard to the business there carried on become subservient to the realty and acquire its character.—American Steel & Iron Co. v. Taft, 199 A. 261, 109 Vt. 469.

(3) "Trade fixtures" defined see infra § 38.

Statutory definition

"Anything intended to remain permanently in its place, though not actually attached to the land, such as a rail fence, is a part of the realty and passes with it. Machinery, not actually attached, but movable at pleasure, is not a part of the realty. Anything detached from the realty becomes personalty instantly on being so detached."—Burpee v. to be applied is difficult to define by general rule,[23] and there is no arbitrary standard whereby to determine, in all cases, what fixtures become realty and what retain their character as personalty.[24] Whether an article is a fixture or not depends in some degree on the facts and circumstances of the particular case,[25] including the relationship of the parties at issue,[26] as considered specifically infra §§ 23–57. Ordinarily the courts hold that for an article to become a fixture there must unite[27] the following requisites: (1) annexation to the realty or something appurtenant thereto, as discussed infra §§ 3–6; (2) adaptability or application of the chattel affixed to the use or purpose to which the realty is appropriated, as discussed infra §§ 7–11; and (3) the intention of the party making the annexation to make a permanent accession to the freehold, as discussed infra § 2.[28] These criteria are necessarily of a somewhat vague and indeterminate character, and, as has been judicially remarked, a judge might frequently decide either way without much danger of having his judgment impeached, or of failing to find some authority to support it.[29] Varying weight, according to the circumstances of the case, may be given to the determinative factors.[30] Also their relative determinative value has varied at different periods of time.[31] One reason which has been suggested for the shifting character of the decisions is the changes in the taste and habits of the community.[32] Where the article meets all the tests for a fixture, mere speculation tending to show that it was not placed in, and attached to, the realty as a fixture will not prevent its being so considered.[33]

Custom has been regarded as inadmissible to show that articles annexed to land were not to be regarded as part of the realty;[34] but there is authority for the contrary view.[35]

Leading case

Ohio.—Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511, 59 Am.D. 634.

Other statements of determining factors

(1) To constitute a fixture the thing must be of an accessory character and must be, in some way, in actual or constructive union with the realty and not merely brought on it. —Holy Ghost Catholic Church of Two Harbors v. Clinton, 211 N.W. 13, 169 Minn. 253.

(2) In determining whether a chattel is so annexed to the freehold as to become a fixture, reference must be had to the nature of the chattel itself, the position of the party placing it where found, the probable intention in putting it there, and the injury that would result from its removal; and the object of the party in placing it on the premises with reference to trade, agriculture, or ornament must be considered.—Crumbley Grocery Co. v. Ferguson, 132 So. 737, 159 Miss. 861.

Ancient rule modified

The ancient rule that whatever was fixed to the realty became a part of it in contemplation of law has been modified so that what is a fixture is now determined by the character of the act by which the structure is put into its place, the policy of the law connected with its purpose, and the intention of those concerned.—Bank of Shelbyville v. Hartford, supra.

Conflict of laws. The question of whether property is a part of real estate is to be determined according to the law of the jurisdiction in which the real estate is located.[36]

Tenant's fixtures. A term which, in its strict legal definition, is to be understood to signify things which are fixed to the freehold of the demised premises, but which nevertheless the tenant is allowed to disannex and take away, provided he seasonably exerts his right to do so.[37]

§ 2. Intention

a. In general
b. Character of intention
c. Whose intention considered
d. Intention distinguished from agreement
e. In relation to permanency

a. In General

In general the intention of the annexor as to whether the article constitutes a permanent accession to the freehold is the primary, if not the controlling, test in determining whether or not it is a fixture.

In determining whether an article is a fixture the intention of the party making the annexation,[38] and whether it was intended to make the property annexed a permanent accession to the freehold,[39] are to be considered, for the intent of the annexor to make the property annexed a permanent accession to the freehold is one of the requisites necessary to make it a fixture.[40] The intention is the

has been said to be controlling;[42] and ordinarily, if the person annexing chattels to real estate intends them to become a permanent accession to the realty, they are fixtures and part of the realty in the eyes of the law,[43] but only then,[44] and not where the annexor's intention was that the annexation be temporary.[45] Intention, however, is not by itself sufficient to make an article a fixture.[46]

b. Character of Intention

The intention considered is not a secret or undisclosed intent, but the apparent intent, that inferred from all the facts and circumstances, such as the relation and situation of the annexor, the policy of the law, the manner of annexation, and the purpose or use for which the annexation was made. The actual intention of the annexor may be immaterial, or under proper circumstances it may be a valid consideration.

The test of intention is given a broad signification.[47] Subject to the rules as to the effect of agreements as to whether an article shall or shall not be a chattel, discussed infra §§ 12–20, the intention which controls is not a secret or undisclosed

26 C.J. p 654 note 31.

Fundamental test

The fundamental test, in determining whether personalty attached to realty is "fixture," is whether purpose of annexation was to make personalty a permanent part of freehold.—Marine Midland Trust Co. of Binghamton v. Ahern, 16 N.Y.S.2d 656.

Modern tendency

The definite tendency in modern times is to accord less significance to the manner of annexation and more to the intention of the person making it.—Marine Midland Trust Co. of Binghamton v. Ahern, supra.

Machinery

The rule applies with regard to machinery in manufacturing plants the same as in the case of any other kind of chattel.—In re Highland Silk Co., D.C.Pa., 41 F.2d 404.

Modern rule

Modern decisions permit fixtures to remain personal property where intent that they should remain personal property can be gathered from conduct of parties.—National Bank of Republic of Chicago v. Wells-Jackson Corporation, 193 N.E. 215, 358 Ill. 356, 98 A.L.R. 618, reversing 272 Ill.App. 561.

When detachable without damage

(1) Intention of parties ordinarily determines whether article so annexed to building that it can be detached without material damage becomes a fixture.—East Ohio Building & Loan Co. v. Holland Furnace Co., 194 N.E. 598, 48 Ohio App. 545.

(2) Intention of one annexing article to building and detachable without material damage to building ordinarily determines whether it becomes fixture.—Industrial Bank of Richmond v. Holland Furnace Co., 153 S.E. 309, 109 W.Va. 176.

(3) Chattels, so affixed to realty as to be removable without destroying or materially injuring them or realty, become part of realty or remain personalty, according to parties' intention at time of annexation.—Clayton v. Lienhard, 167 A. 321, 312 Pa. 433.

Articles within rule

(1) Articles which are ponderous and firmly attached and are difficult to remove, including complete buildings, may retain character of pure chattels if such is intention of parties.—Nadien v. Bazata, 22 N.E.2d 1, 303 Mass. 496.

intent,[48] nor need it be expressed in words,[49] although the expressed intent, if any, of the annexor, while not necessarily controlling,[50] is to be considered.[51] It is the apparent intent,[52] that manifested by the physical facts,[53] the intention to be inferred from all the facts and circumstances of the annexation,[54] which is considered; and the actual intention of the party making the annexation may be immaterial.[55] However, occasionally the view has been more or less clearly indicated that the actual intention of the party who made the annexation is a valid consideration in this regard;[56] and such a view appears to be involved in the occasional statements that intention controls only when there is a reasonable doubt as to whether the chattel has changed its status,[57] when severance would not work an injury to the realty[58] or when the article is not especially adapted for use in that place.[59]

Not from expressed intent alone
As respects question whether chattel becomes a fixture, the intention of the parties making the annexation of a chattel to a freehold is determined not from the expressed intention alone, but such intention must be reasonably inferable from the facts and circumstances surrounding the annexation.—Equitable Life Assur. Soc. of U. S. v. Chapman, 282 N.W. 355, 225 Iowa 988.

Value
In absence of agreement as to whether concrete bank vault constructed by lessee is a fixture, consideration is to be given to value of the lot and building to which the vault is attached, the cost of removal, whether the property will be worth more or less after removal of the vault, and whether the property was increased in value or damaged by the construction of the vault for all general purposes.—Savage v. Leading case
Ohio.—Teaff v. Hewitt, 1 Ohio St. 511, 59 Am.D. 634.

Matters considered
(1) In determining intention of parties as to whether machinery installed in manufacturing establishment was to remain personalty, their actions as evidenced by their contracts, permanence of installation of machinery, its nature, and its relation to concern as a going business, must be considered.—In re American Pile Fabric Co., C.C.A.Pa., 85 F.2d 961, reversing, D.C., 12 F.Supp. 86, certiorari denied Bateman v. Ideal Building & Loan Ass'n, 57 S.Ct. 320, 299 U.S. 615, 81 L.Ed. 454.

(2) When not expressly stated, the intention must be ascertained from the relations of the parties, from what they did and said, and from the character of the property and the use for which it was intended.—Kennedy v. Crumlish, C.C.A.Pa., 85 F.2d 665.

Where removable without injury
Where the chattel may be removed

ing intent it has been held that the other tests considered essential in determining whether or not property is a fixture, that is, the character of the annexation to the realty, see infra §§ 4–6, and the character of the article and its adaptability to the uses of the realty, see infra §§ 7–11, may be considered subsidiary elements employed as tests for determining the intention.[68]

Time of intention. In general the intention considered is the intention at the time the property is annexed to the realty;[69] but it has been stated that the intent which is regarded as controlling is not the initial intention at the time the chattel is acquired.[70]

c. Whose Intention Considered

It is the intention of the annexor, and not that of some other person, which is controlling. However, if the annexor does not own the realty, his intention is immaterial.

In general it is the intention of the annexor which is controlling,[71] and the intention of another person is in itself immaterial,[72] except as it may be incorporated in a contract which is valid and effective by reason of such other's interest in the land or in the article annexed, as considered infra §§ 12–20. Where the person making the annexation has an absolute estate in the land and is the owner of the chattel, the absence of any conflicting interests at the time of annexation makes his intention an appropriate consideration in determining the character of the article, as when, for instance, the question subsequently arises between his heir and executor, see infra § 30, or as between one claiming that the article passed on a subsequent conveyance of the land and one denying such claim, see infra §§ 44, 49–51. The applicability of the theory of intention is, however, not so clear when one annexes his chattel to land belonging to another, see infra § 25, and there is authority to the effect that in such case the intention of the annexor is immaterial.[73] It has been said in this connection that if, as between himself and the owner of the soil, the person making an erection thereon has no right to erect it as property separate and distinct from the freehold, an intention so to do, no matter how clearly manifested, is of no avail.[74] However, a contrary view has been indicated, at least in cases involving mistake in affixing the property to the other's realty.[75]

d. Intention Distinguished from Agreement

The intention of the annexor is to be distinguished from the joint intention of two or more parties as indicated by an agreement between them which may determine the status of the article as between such parties.

The question of the intention of the individual party making the annexation, which is regarded as controlling, is to be distinguished from that of joint intention, as indicated by agreement between them, of two or more parties, each of whom has, at the time of annexation, an interest in either the land or in the article annexed. Such an agreement, when made with the owner of the chattel before or at the time of annexation, has perhaps occasionally been referred to as of weight in determining the intention with which the annexation was made.[76] Thus, when the courts refer, as they quite without injury to it or the realty, the manner of its annexation and other circumstances and facts, including its possible uses, are to be considered in determining the intention of the party annexing it.—Whitaker-Glessner Co. v. Ohio Savings Bank & Trust Co., C.C.A.Ohio, 22 F. 2d 773.

frequently do, not to the intention of the particular party making the annexation, but to "the intention of the parties," as controlling in this regard,[77] they have in mind, it appears, the joint intention of the parties in interest as evidenced by agreement between them, which is considered infra §§ 12–20.

e. In Relation to Permanency

The intention to make the article annexed a permanent accession to the freehold does not require an intent that it be perpetual, but it is sufficient if it is intended that the annexation shall continue until the article is worn out or superseded, or its purpose accomplished, except where the purpose is of a temporary character.

In the requirement of an intention to make the article annexed a permanent accession to the land the expression "permanent" does not, it seems, imply that the annexation must be intended to be perpetual,[78] but rather that the article shall appear to be intended to remain where fastened until worn out,[79] until the purpose to which the realty is devoted has been accomplished,[80] or until the article is superseded by another article more suitable for the purpose.[81] It appears to be sufficient that it is intended to remain where placed as long as the land or building to which it is annexed may be used for the same purpose.[82] The intention of the annexor that the article shall remain "indefinitely" has also been referred to as the criterion.[83] In a number of cases the purpose for which the annexation was made was recognized as in itself of so temporary a character as to show that the intention could not have been to make the article a permanent accession.[84] However, the fact that the character of the operations on land is such that an exhaustion of the material therefor on the land will necessitate, at some time in the future, a cessation of such operations, or a change in the character of the machinery necessary therefor, has not ordinarily been regarded as showing an intention that the machinery originally installed for the conduct of such operations was not intended to be for the permanent improvement of the land and was consequently not a part of the realty.[85] On the other hand the fact that the operation of the machinery involves the destruction of the supply of material on the land has occasionally been referred to as indicating a temporary purpose.[86]

§ 3. Necessity of Annexation to Realty

a. In general
b. Articles not yet in place
c. Adaptation of realty

a. In General

Annexation is necessary in order to render an article a fixture, except in Pennsylvania and perhaps in a few other jurisdictions.

It is ordinarily stated, expressly or by implication, that annexation of a chattel to the realty is necessary in order to render it a part of the realty,[87] or, at least, it must be mechanically fitted so as, in ordinary understanding, to constitute a part

Prerequisite to consideration of other factors

Chattel's adaptation to use of part of realty to which connected, intention to make it permanent accession to freehold, situation of party making annexation, and mode and purpose thereof, become factors in determining whether it is fixture only when actual or constructive annexation thereof to freehold is indicated.—Consolidated Gas, Electric Light & Power Co. of Baltimore v. Ryan, 169 A. 794, 165 Md. 484.

realty, since other circumstances may negative its status as a fixture.[91] In Pennsylvania, however, annexation has been stated not to be necessary, at least as regards machinery in a mill, factory, or other industrial enterprise, it being there considered that the adaptation or necessity of the article to the use for which the freehold is devoted is the determining factor in deciding whether it is a part of the realty,[92] except where the intention not to make it a part of the realty is shown.[93] There are also judicial expressions in other jurisdictions, made in cases involving the question of whether or not a certain article passed by a conveyance of the land, to the effect that what is adapted or necessary to the use to which the land is appropriated is a fixture, although in no way annexed, which would indicate that the solution depends primarily on the construction of the language used in the conveyance.[94] The view that annexation is not required has been criticized.[95]

b. Articles Not Yet in Place

In some jurisdictions articles or materials lying on the land and intended to be subsequently attached thereto or incorporated therein have been held a part of the realty, but in others the contrary view is followed.

In a number of cases the view has been adopted that articles or materials lying on the land, if intended to be subsequently attached thereto or incorporated therein, constitute a part of the realty.[96] In other cases a contrary view has been asserted to the effect that there is, under such circumstances, no annexation in any sense of the articles or materials, and that they consequently retain the character of personalty.[97] In so far as the question may be whether such articles or materials are included in a conveyance or mortgage of the land, as appears infra §§ 43–51, the intention of the parties to the instrument, as determined by a construction of the language used in the light of the surrounding circumstances, is the important consideration, and whether they are legally a part of the land is important only in its bearing on such intention.

c. Adaptation of Realty

The adaptation of the realty for the purpose of attaching particular equipment thereto may be such as to render the article attached a fixture.

In general, where a structure is designed and built with a view of having certain equipment made a part thereof, such equipment when attached thereto becomes a fixture.[98] So, although the fact that a place was prepared in which to put an article does not in itself make the article part of the realty,[99] the fact that a recess or excavation was prepared in order that an article might be placed therein has been referred to as tending to show that the article so placed has become a fixture.[1]

Annexation not alone determinative

Annexation to the freehold is not alone determinative, but the relationship of the parties, the kind and use of the property, and the intention of the owner as to its use are the determining factors.—Pennington v. Black, 88 S.W.2d 969, 261 Ky. 728.

26 C.J. p 659 note 70.

How put in place

The old common-law criterion of physical attachment is no longer operative. On the contrary the question of whether or not an article is a fixture depends on the nature and character of the act by which the structure is put in place, the policy of the law and the intentions of those concerned in the act.—Waltman v. Conversion to specific purpose

In determining whether machinery is a fixture there is no distinction between machinery placed in a factory erected for a specific manufacturing purpose and like machinery placed in a building constructed for an entirely different purpose, but thereafter converted to a use for which the machinery is essential. A building converted and adapted to a specific purpose occupies the same status as a building erected for a like purpose. —Danville Holding Corporation v. Clement, 16 S.E.2d 345, 178 Va. 223.

§ 4. Mode and Sufficiency of Annexation

In determining whether an article is a fixture its manner of annexation is considered, and while that may be such as to show without reference to other considerations an intention to make the article a permanent accession to the realty, it is ordinarily considered as only one factor and that a minor one. Statutes sometimes enumerate various modes of annexation which are sufficient to constitute an article a fixture.

At common law the general rule is that articles attached to the realty become fixtures,[2] and in general where the other criteria are satisfied articles annexed to the realty are fixtures.[3] In determining whether there has been an annexation sufficient to comply with the requirement therefor, see supra § 3, the character or manner of the annexation to the realty,[4] having permanent usage in view,[5] is considered, together with the circumstances under which the article was placed on the realty,[6] and also, it has been held, the effect on the plant as a complete unit of the presence or absence of the particular thing.[7] What constitutes a compliance with the requirement of annexation is a subject of very considerable difficulty, with regard to which it is impossible to give any comprehensive rules, in view of the various forms which annexation may assume and the character of the cases themselves, in which the mode of annexation is frequently considered only in connection with other considerations growing out of the character of the articles and the purpose to which the realty is devoted, as discussed infra §§ 7–11. Varying weight, according to the circumstances of the case, is given to the mode of annexation.[8] It may be such as alone to

Mode of annexation controls

At common law, the mode of annexation, slight and temporary, or immovable and permanent, is the single criterion for determining the character of chattels as fixtures.—Danville Holding Corporation v. Clement, 16 S.E.2d 345, 178 Va. 223.

show, without reference to other considerations, an intention that the articles shall be a permanent accession to the realty,[9] and it is within this class of cases that those decisions may be considered to fall which consider only the mode of annexation in determining that the article in question is part of the realty.[10] Generally, however, the mode of annexation, when considered at all, is considered as only one factor,[11] and not necessarily a controlling one,[12] in the determination of the character of the article annexed. Although there is some authority to the effect that the manner of attachment of the article to the realty is the principal factor in determining whether it is a fixture,[13] the weight of the modern authority treats it as a minor consideration in determining whether the article annexed constitutes a part of the realty,[14] except at least as the article may have been so incorporated with the realty as to be incapable of severance without substantial injury thereto, see infra § 5 e. In general, if there is annexation of the article to the realty, and in the majority of jurisdictions the annexation may be either actual, see infra § 5 a or constructive, see infra § 6, the nature and strength of the union is immaterial.[15]

Reason for change

This later rule is due to great advances in the science of mechanical engineering, bringing on great changes in industrial conditions, and creating a situation in the manufactories in which a building is only one of the incidents or accessories of a manufacturing plant considered as a unit.—Danville Holding Corporation v. Clement, 16 S.E.2d 345, 178 Va. 223.

Little weight

The method or extent of the annexation of a chattel to realty carries little weight, in determining whether it is a fixture, except in so far as the method or extent relates to the nature of the article, the use to which it is applied, and other attending circumstances as indicating the intention of the party making the annexation.—Danville Holding Corporation v. Clement, supra.

Slight circumstance showing intention

The method of the annexation to the realty receives slight consideration and then only as a circumstance from which the intention of the annexor may be deduced.—Danville Holding Corporation v. Clement, supra.

Degree of force by which attached

Permanency of attachment does not depend so much on degree of physical force with which personalty is attached as on motive and intention of party in attaching the personalty.—Van Buren v. Gallo, 283 N.Y.S. 453, 157 Misc. 289—Marine Midland Trust Co. of Binghamton v. Ahern, 16 N.Y. S.2d 656.

Slight annexation

(1) That the annexation is slight and easily displaced will not prevent an article becoming a fixture where the other requisites are satisfied.—Glueck & Co. v. Powell, 61 S.W.2d 406, 227 Mo.App. 1226.

Without foundation

Under statute so providing, buildings or other constructions, even on land as to be and remain ab initio not a part of the realty, but personalty.[17] In determining whether a building is a fixture, its manner of construction [18] and whether it is annexed to, or imbedded in, the soil [19] is to be considered. The foundation on which a building is constructed is considered,[20] but it is not conclusive in determining whether it is or is not a fixture.[21] Thus buildings may become realty without having foundations thereunder or being attached to the ground.[22] The facts that it is constructed on mudsills,[23] and that the soil was not disturbed in the process of building,[24] are circumstances to be considered, but they do not establish conclusively that the structure is not a fixture.[25]

It has been held that machinery is normally personal property,[26] and is not deemed a fixture except where it is installed in such manner that its removal will result in material injury to it or the realty, see infra § 5 e, or where the building in which it is placed was specially designed to house it, see supra § 3 c, or where there is other evidence that its installation was of a permanent nature.[27]

A change in the character of an article from that of personalty to that of a fixture may sometimes occur from a change in the relationship of the owner to the premises rather than any change in the character of annexation.[28]

Statutory provisions exist in some states to the effect that a thing is to be deemed affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, as in the case of trees, vines, or shrubs, or imbedded in it, as in the case of walls, or permanently resting on it, as in the case of buildings, or permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws.[29] Such a statutory provision is simply a rule for general guidance, however;[30] the means of attachment mentioned are not exclusive, and an article may be attached by other means than the examples given.[31] Also, the without foundation, are immovable by nature.—Vaughn v. Kemp, supra.

a. In General

In general any actual annexation is sufficient for the requirements of a fixture, and although there are general statements to the effect that actual annexation is required, as a general rule it is not absolutely essential.

In general any actual annexation of the article to the realty or to something appurtenant thereto is sufficient to constitute an article a fixture.[33] In many cases it has been stated, frequently merely as a reiteration of the early rule, and generally as a part of a general statement of the requisites of a fixture and not in a consideration of the necessity for an actual physical attachment, that in order for an article to become a fixture actual annexation to the realty or to something appurtenant thereto is required.[34] The modern rule generally followed, however, is that it is not absolutely necessary for an article to be actually fastened to the freehold in order to make it a part thereof,[35] and, as appears

Construction to include words "for instance"

In statute prescribing that thing is deemed affixed to land when "permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts or screws," the phrase "for instance" may be understood after word "as" and different means mentioned are not exclusive but are mere examples of permanent attachment.—Mortgage Bond Co. v. infra § 6, constructive annexation may be sufficient to constitute an article a fixture.

b. Retention in Place by Gravity

Mere juxtaposition, as where the article is retained in place by gravity without any fastening, has been held sufficient annexation for a fixture.

Mere juxtaposition when accompanied with sufficient other elements has been regarded as sufficient to make an article a fixture.[36] So, although retention in place by gravity, without any fastening, has been held to be insufficient,[37] other cases, some decided under statutes which embody the idea,[38] have regarded this as sufficient, provided that the other requisites of intention, considered supra § 2, and adaptability, considered infra §§ 7–11, are satisfied and the article or structure is so heavy that it is as effectively kept in place by gravity as if it were fastened.[39]

c. Enclosure of Article

The fact that the article is so inclosed in a building or structure that it cannot be removed without either taking the article itself to pieces or making or enlarging an opening in the building or structure tends to show that it is a fixture, but it is not conclusive; nor on the other hand does the fact that the article can be removed as a whole through an existing opening conclusively establish it to be personalty.

In accord with the decisions that an article is not necessarily a fixture because its removal would cause injury to the realty, see infra § 5 e, are decisions that the article is not a fixture because so inclosed in a building or structure that it cannot be removed without either taking the article itself to pieces, or making or enlarging an opening in the building or structure.[40] However, this has been regarded as tending to show that the article is a fixture,[41] while on the other hand the fact that an article can be removed as a whole through an existing opening has been referred to as evidence to show that it is personalty.[42]

d. Connection with Motive Power

Connection with the motive power by which a machine is run, as by belt or other mode of gearing, is not of itself sufficient to make an article a fixture, but it may be considered. Disconnection of the article from the motive power does not alone show that it was not originally intended to be an integral part of the plant.

That a machine is connected with the motive power by a belt or other mode of gearing is not in itself sufficient to make it a fixture.[43] However, some weight has occasionally been attached to a

Physical attachment
Physical attachment of structure to soil or to appurtenance thereto is not essential to make structure part of realty.—Cornell College v. Crain, 235 N.W. 731, 211 Iowa 1343.

Immovable by destination
An "immovable by destination" may be created either without any physical attachment to fundus, but merely by dedication to service of fundus, or by means of physical attachment affixing movable permanently.—Bank of White Castle v. Clark, 159 So. 409, 181 La. 303.

connection of that character.[44] On the other hand, the fact that a motor has been disconnected from other machinery does not show that it was not originally intended or has ceased to be an integral part of the plant, where it has not been removed or disconnected from its foundation.[45]

e. Injury by Removal

The fact that the article is removable without injury to the freehold or itself does not prevent its being a fixture, nor does the fact that its removal will injure the freehold or itself alone establish that it is a fixture; but the fact that removal of the article will or will not injure the freehold or itself is a factor to be considered, although not a conclusive one.

The fact that removal of the article will or will not injure the realty[46] or will or will not injure the article itself[47] is a factor to be considered in determining whether it is or is not a fixture. That the article is removable without injury to the freehold does not prevent its being a fixture;[48] but that its removal will not injure the realty[49] or the article,[50]

Meaning of material injury

(1) The test as to whether the article may be removed without "material injury to the premises" means physical damage to the premises and not mere deprivation of the value of the chattels.—Citizens Bank of Greenfield v. Mergenthaler Linotype Co., 25 N.E.2d 444, 216 Ind. 573.

(2) In some cases impairment of the enjoyment or usefulness of the realty seems to be considered as constituting injury to the freehold.—Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Kimball, 94 P.2d 1101, 163 Or. 31.

(3) The word "material" means not only material injury to the structure, but also injury to the institution of which the structure is a part.—Domestic Electric Co. v. Mezzaluna, 162 A. 722, 109 N.J.Law 574, followed in MacLeod v. Walter J. Satterthwaid, Inc., 166 A. 163, 113 N.J. Eq. 238, affirming 157 A. 670, 109 N.J. Eq. 414.

(4) If the severance of the article will prevent the structure from being used for the purposes for which it was erected or for which it has been adapted, then it is not severable without material injury to the freehold.—Smyth Sales Corporation v. Norfolk Building & Loan Ass'n, 184 A. 204, 116 N.J.Law 293, 111 A.L.R. 357—Mugler Auto Pit Co. v. Tide Water Oil Co., 185 A. 542, 14 N.J. Misc. 471.

or both,[51] has been regarded as a consideration tending to show that it is not a fixture; and the fact that injury would not result to the realty has in some cases been considered conclusive on that question,[52] although, under the facts existing in a number of cases, the fact that removal would not cause injury to the article has been regarded as of little or no weight as showing the article not to be a fixture.[53] On the other hand, the fact that the annexation is such that the article annexed cannot be removed without injury to the building does not, it seems, conclusively establish it as a part of the realty;[54] but the fact that the removal of the article would cause injury to the realty,[55] or substantial injury to the article itself,[56] has been regarded as tending to show that it is a fixture. tached to a building for the obvious purpose for which the building was erected, or to increase its value for such purpose, and to be used permanently in connection therewith,[60] as, for example, machinery placed in, and attached to, a mill or other manufacturing plant,[61] ordinarily are a part of the realty, even though they are removable without injury to themselves or the realty, or without injury to the basic structure to which they have been affixed,[62] and even though they may be removed and used elsewhere.[63] On the other hand, the attachment of an article such as a gas stove to supply pipes by a screw which can be detached without any injury to the realty will not operate to make the article a fixture contrary to the intention of the annexor.[64]

In condemnation proceedings. It has been held that in condemnation proceedings if so-called fixtures can be removed without substantial injury either to the real estate or to the article, they remain personalty and need not be taken as part of the realty.[65]

f. Movability of Article

The fact that the article may be moved from place to place on the land has been held to indicate that it is not a fixture, but is not conclusive.

That the article is not so attached to the land as to indicate an intention that it shall remain in one place on the land has been referred to as indicating that it continues personalty;[66] but the removability of a structure is not the sole test of whether it is a fixture or not,[67] and occasionally an article has been regarded as constituting a fixture, in legal contemplation, although capable of removal from place to place on the land and intended to be so moved.[68]

g. Attachment to Other Land

An appliance or other article placed on one piece of land may be so physically attached to another piece and used in connection therewith that it is regarded as a fixture to the latter land.

It may occur that an appliance, piece of apparatus, or other article, while placed on or in one piece of land, and physically attached thereto, is, in purpose and method of its utilization, so associated with another piece of land, that it is to be regarded as legally annexed, that is, a fixture, to the latter land rather than the former.[69]

§ 6. —— Constructive

Constructive annexation, as when an article is severed for a temporary purpose, or when the article is an accessory or essential part of an article or structure which is actually annexed, may be sufficient to constitute an article a fixture.

It is held in some cases that under certain circumstances constructive annexation, rather than actual physical connection, is sufficient to constitute an article a fixture,[70] as, for example, in the case of articles severed for a temporary purpose,[71] or of articles which, although not themselves actually annexed to the realty, are parts of or accessories to articles or structures which are annexed.[72] Not infrequently, when a machine is so annexed to the land and of such a character that it is regarded as a fixture to the land, a tool or appliance which is in effect an essential part of such machine is also regarded as a fixture.[73]

Rolling stock of a railroad has sometimes been treated as realty on the theory of constructive annexation or principles analogous thereto.[74] The later and best reasoned cases are, however, opposed to such view.[75]

§ 7. Character of Article Annexed

Apart from an agreement between the parties, the nature or character of an article annexed to realty is a factor in determining its status as a fixture.

Apart from an agreement between the parties, discussed infra §§ 12–20, and apart from, or in addition to, the other elements, considered supra §§ 1–6, the nature or character of the article annexed to the realty has generally been considered a factor in determining whether or not it has become a fixture.[76]

What constitutes

(1) Constructive annexation is deemed to exist where the chattel, without being physically fastened to the realty, is dedicated thereto and its status as personalty caused to cease by the owner's duly manifested intention to make it a part of the realty.—Cumberland County Power & Light Co. v. Hotel Ambassador, 183 A. 132, 134 Me. 153.

(2) Chattel is "constructively annexed" to realty when it is an indispensable, integral part thereof.—Thomsen v. Cullen, 219 N.W. 439, 196 Wis. 581.

Immovable by destination

An immovable by destination may be created without any physical attachment to the fundus, but merely by the dedication of the movable to the service of the fundus.—Bank of White Castle v. Clark, 159 So. 409, 181 La. 303.

The status of the person making the annexation and his relation to other persons as factors in determining the character of articles annexed to realty as fixtures are considered infra §§ 23–53.

§ 8. —— Adaptation to Particular Use or Place

The adaptation or appropriation of an article annexed to realty to the use or purpose to which the realty is devoted is an important consideration in determining its status as a fixture, such adaptation or appropriation frequently being an essential element.

As stated supra § 7, the nature or character of the article annexed to the realty is a determining factor in answering the question of whether or not the article is a fixture, it being said that to-day the emphasis is placed on the nature of the article and the uses and purposes for which it is held or employed.[77] By the nature or character of the article is usually meant its relation to the purpose to which the land or realty itself has been devoted, such relationship being a leading consideration in determining whether the article is to be regarded as legally constituting a part of the land, the theory sometimes being that if the article is of such a character as to conduce to the realization of this purpose, it is presumably intended by the annexor to be a permanent accession.[78] Thus it is frequently said that one essential to the conversion of a chattel into realty is its adaptation, appropriation, or application to the use or purpose to which the realty with which it is connected is appropriated,[79] although many other cases refer to the adaptation of an article to the use to which the realty is appropriated as merely one of the factors or tests which should or must be considered in determining that it is a part of the realty.[80] Still other cases speak of the character of the use of the article annexed as important.[81]

Adaptation to particular place. That the article was specially constructed or fitted with a view to its location and use on the particular land, or in the particular building, it being consequently less readily susceptible of use elsewhere, tends to show that it was intended to constitute a part of the land.[82]

Adaptation to use elsewhere. The fact that the article annexed is adapted to use elsewhere is sometimes mentioned as a consideration tending to show that it retains its chattel character,[83] although this is by no means conclusive.[84]

Articles not designed to be part of the realty retain their character as personalty.[85]

Part of architectural design. Occasionally, the fact that an article annexed is necessary or desirable as a part of the architectural design or finish of the room or building has been referred to as a consideration indicative of its character as a fixture.[86] Such conformity of itself, however, does not make the article annexed a part of the realty.[87]

§ 9. —— Necessity of Article

The necessity of the article to the use to which the realty is devoted is an important element in determining its character as a fixture.

The necessity of the article or structure for the particular use to which the land or realty is devoted has frequently been said to be an important element in determining its character as realty,[88] and is a view which has been quite frequently applied in the case of machinery or other apparatus, regarded as a necessary or approximately necessary part of a manufacturing or other industrial plant, regarded as a whole.[89]

Essential element of adaptation

In some jurisdictions the adaptation or necessity of the article to the use to which the realty is devoted is the only consideration in determining its character as a fixture, at least in the case of a chattel placed in an industrial establishment for permanent use, the article being considered a fixture if indispensible to the carrying on of the specific business to which the realty is devoted.[90] The rule aforesaid is sometimes called the institution doctrine, to the effect that, when a chattel, which is permanently essential to the completeness of a structure, with regard to its character and its functioning in the use for which it was intended, is actually, purposely, and lawfully affixed to the structure, it becomes part of the realty.[91]

§ 10. —— Purpose of Annexation

The purpose for which a chattel is annexed to the realty is an important factor in determining its status as a fixture.

The purpose for which a chattel has been annexed to the realty has often been held to be an important consideration in determining its status as a fixture.[92] So it has been said that an article may be regarded as a fixture if annexed to improve the realty,[93] or to enhance the value of the realty,[94]

Annexation by weight and gravity
Cal.—M. P. Moller, Inc. v. Wilson, 63 P.2d 818, 8 Cal.2d 31.

Building designed for special purpose
In the ordinary case of articles necessary or convenient for the use of a building designed for a special purpose, the building, with equipment, has a resale or leasing value for the purpose for which it has been specially built, and hence, equipment should pass with the building as part of the realty for the convenient use thereof.—Southern California Tel. Co. v. State Board of Equalization, 82 P.2d 422, 12 Cal.2d 127.

Furnishings of "efficiency apartment"
Kitchen furnishings, designed for, and peculiarly adapted to, "efficiency apartment" building, became fixtures when installed, where building was originally designed and built as "efficiency apartment" and could not be thus used without such equipment.—Mortgage Bond Co. v. Stephens, 74 P. 2d 361, 181 Okl. 419.

Seats in theater
Seats in theater are considered as fixtures, since "theater" is permanent structure, and without seating capacity would be incomplete.—In re Albanese, D.C.N.Y., 44 F.2d 602.

Disrupting purpose as defense to foreclosure
It has been held, however, that the mere fact that removal of machinery placed in a building erected for a particular purpose would prevent the successful carrying out of purpose for which building was erected would not constitute such removal a damage to the realty, so as to establish a defense to suit to foreclose against such machinery a statutory lien for labor.—Meena v. Drousiotis, 200 So. 362, 146 Fla. 168.

while, conversely, if it is attached for a use that does not enhance the value of the realty, and if it may be removed at the pleasure of the one who attaches it, it remains a chattel.[95]

Sometimes the important question is stated to be whether the annexation is for the purpose of the permanent improvement or use of the land,[96] or for the improvement of the land for the purpose for which it is used.[97] Hence, an article attached to the realty to effect a temporary purpose only has been held to be personalty,[98] while, on the other hand, it has been said that whatever is placed in a building to carry out the purpose for which it was erected or to which it has been devoted and permanently to increase its value for such purpose may be regarded as a part of the realty.[99]

Attachment for convenience. It has been held that a chattel annexed to the realty to render the premises more convenient in use,[1] or for the better enjoyment thereof,[2] may render the same a fixture.

Convenience in use of chattel. That a machine or piece of apparatus is fastened to the building for the purpose merely of steadying it, or of otherwise making it more convenient or effectual in use, has been referred to as insufficient to give to it the character of a fixture.[3] However, such articles may become fixtures, notwithstanding this manner of attachment,[4] as where convenience or steadying of the article is not the only purpose for its attachment to the realty.[5]

§ 11. —— Particular Classes of Articles

The test of the character of an article annexed to realty, as related to the use to which the realty is devoted, has been applied to various articles held or held not to be fixtures under the circumstances of particular cases.

Buildings. The character of a building[8] and its adaptability to the purposes for which the land is used[9] have been held to be factors to be considered in determining whether or not it constitutes a fixture. Ordinarily, however, buildings placed upon the land have been regarded as part of the realty, occasionally without reference to any actual fastening to the ground, on the theory presumably that they are accessory to the realty as being necessarily, or at least presumptively, built for the purpose of improving it,[10] although buildings of light construction, especially if not firmly attached to the land, have occasionally been regarded as personalty, as being evidently annexed for temporary purposes only.[11]

Store buildings. It has been held that, generally speaking, such articles as shelving, electric ceiling fans, and signboards attached to a store building are considered parts of such building.[12]

Mines. By statute in some jurisdictions machinery and tools used in working or developing a mine are deemed affixed to the realty composing the mine.[13]

Fences likewise have ordinarily been regarded, in the same manner, as a part of the realty;[14] but they are not necessarily so.[15]

Machinery or apparatus in buildings. The test of the character of the article annexed, as related to the use to which the realty is devoted, has been applied in connection with machinery or apparatus in a building, it often being said or held that when a building is erected for, or permanently adapted or devoted to, a particular purpose, anything annexed to the building for the carrying out of that purpose may be considered as accessory to the realty itself,[16] while such articles annexed merely for the purpose for which the building happens at the time to be used are not to be so regarded.[17]

It has sometimes been said that the chief test in the determination is whether the machinery is permanent and essential to the purpose for which the building is occupied or employed.[18] In this test no distinction is made between machinery placed in a factory erected for a specific manufacturing purpose and like machinery placed in a building constructed for an entirely different purpose, but thereafter converted to a use for which the machinery is essential.[19]

Motive power machinery distinguished. The test of adaptability or appropriateness to the use to which the realty is devoted has sometimes been applied as in part determining that engines and other apparatus furnishing the motive power of a factory or mill are a part of the realty,[20] occasionally in contradistinction to machinery other than motive power considered personalty as being accessory to a business merely.[21] The latter class of machinery has, however, quite as frequently been considered to be a part of the realty by an application of the same or analogous principles.[22]

Railroad tracks, structures, and equipment. Railroad tracks and material therein, railroad structures, and other equipment on the right of way over the land of another are generally regarded as constituting personalty,[23] sometimes on the theory that they were annexed without any idea of serving or improving the land,[24] sometimes because considered to be in the nature of trade fixtures,[25] and sometimes because of an implied agreement, discussed infra § 14 d. As personalty, such property may be removed by the railroad or its successors on abandonment of the right of way or within a reasonable time thereafter.[26]

§ 12. Agreements

Whether or not an article annexed to realty constitutes a fixture is often dependent on an agreement with respect thereto. Such agreements as between the parties are considered infra § 13 if express, and infra § 14 if implied. Agreements between landlord and tenant are considered infra § 15. The effect of such agreements as to third persons is considered infra §§ 17–20.

Constructive severance by agreement is considered infra § 21.

Examine Pocket Parts for later cases.

§ 13. —— As between the Parties in General

As a general rule parties, as between themselves, may fix on a chattel to be annexed to realty the character of personalty, but they are limited sometimes to chattels which do not lose their identity, or which can be removed without material injury to the freehold.

As a general rule, parties, as between themselves, may, in their dealings with chattels annexed to, or used in connection with, real estate, fix on them whatever character, as realty or personalty, on which they may agree,[27] such right being, in some

"The maintenance of railroad tracks and the essential equipments of the transportation business upon a piece of land involves as a rule the appropriation of so much of the land thus occupied to a use or purpose to which it is not naturally or customarily adapted. In other words, when realty is so appropriated and used, it is not devoted to the ordinary or usual purposes or uses of land. Nor, obviously, can it be said that the structures erected upon the land in dispute has had or can have the effect of enhancing the value of the land or improving or benefiting it for the purpose to which otherwise it might be devoted or, in ordinary circumstances, is adapted."—Placer County v. Tracks serving owner of realty

When tracks are installed solely to serve the private enterprise of the owner of the land, are constructed and maintained at his expense, and can be used for no other purpose, the company's right to remove them depends on whether or not they are fixtures.—Helena & Livingston Smelting & Reduction Co. v. jurisdictions, recognized by statute,[28] and the law will enforce such understanding whenever the rights of third parties will not be prejudiced.[29] Thus it is generally held that an agreement by the owner of the land, in favor of the owner of the article at the time of annexation, or of one then having a lien thereon, to the effect that the article shall retain its personal character or be removable as personalty, is ordinarily valid and effective as against the former, precluding a claim by him to the article as part of the land, to the exclusion of the latter.[30] As discussed infra § 14, an implied agreement to this effect is equally effective.

This right of control by agreement has been stated to be limited to the extent that it cannot apply where the article annexed or mode of annexation is such that the article is entirely deprived of the character of personal property,[31] or when the article annexed has been so built into the realty as to become an essential part thereof,[32] or as to lose its identity.[33] Such agreements are also sometimes held to be valid and effective as preserving the character of annexed chattels if they may be removed without injury to the realty,[34] while, conversely, occasionally the fact that the removal of the article would involve substantial injury to it or to the realty has been regarded as invalidating such an agreement or rendering it ineffective.[35] There are cases, however, which hold that the right

Statutory bond unnecessary

Seller reserving title to opera chairs by conditional sale contract was not required to furnish bond to indemnify vendee for injuries to freehold in removing them, especially where one to whom mortgagee, purchasing theater at foreclosure sale, conveyed premises, furnished security to retain possession of chairs after seller obtained writ of replevin.—National Theatre Supply Co. v. Test of removability

In determining removability of goods sold under conditional sales contract and affixed to realty, as regards status of goods as "fixtures" or personal property, test is whether detaching goods would result in material injury to freehold, and not whether goods are essential to proper functioning of plant or building in which they have been placed for use.—Miller v. of removal conferred by agreement is, as between the parties, not affected by the fact that removal might injure the realty.[36]

Necessity for writing. To be effective, the agreement need not be in writing, being in regard to personalty.[37]

Competency of parties. The parties to the agreement must be competent to contract with each other.[38]

Effect as preserving personal character of article. The cases which recognize the effectiveness of such an agreement ordinarily state or assume that it operates to preserve the personal character of the article annexed,[39] and consequently, as discussed infra § 60, trover or replevin may be brought with respect to such articles, and, as discussed infra § 56, execution may be levied thereon as personalty. However, there are cases in which it is asserted or indicated that the agreement does not preserve the chattel character of the article annexed, but merely operates to give a right of removal to the beneficiary of the agreement.[40]

It has been said that the article annexed is a fixture as regards persons not parties to the agreement, although it is personalty as between the parties.[41]

Loss of character as personalty. Conceding that the article annexed retains its chattel character by

26 C.J. p 677 note 25.

Intent not controlling

Where personal property, sold under conditional sale, cannot be removed without practically destroying it, intent of parties as to character of property does not control.—East New York Electric Co. v. Petmaland Realty Co., 154 N.E. 530, 243 N.Y. 477, 58 A.L.R. 1119, reversing 210 N.Y.S. 844, 214 App.Div. 730.

As between parties

Where parties agree by contract that a chattel shall, notwithstanding its annexation to the freehold, retain the character and incidents of personal property, as between themselves such chattel shall be treated as personalty, notwithstanding the chattel, but for such agreement, would, by reason of its extrinsic physical characteristics after its annexation to the soil, be regarded as a part of the freehold.—Lewis v. E. F. Schlichter Co., 112 A. 282, 137 Md. 217.

Intent

That chattel was sold under agreement that it should remain personalty furnished indication that conditional buyer did not intend that it should become part of realty.—Grinnell Co. v. Gardner Trust Co., 193 N.E. 37, 288 Mass. 385.

Effect on title

Person installing automatic sprinkler system in building under bailment lease contract, providing for retention of title until full payment therefor, with right to remove system on default, had contractual right to remove it in such case, although title passed to building owner.—Clayton v. reason of the agreement, it loses such character as soon as the separate interest of the beneficiary under the agreement is extinguished,[42] as by his transfer of the article to the landowner,[43] his discharge of the obligation,[44] his receipt of payment extinguishing his right,[45] his relinquishment of his claim,[46] or the acquisition by one person of both the land and chattel.[47]

Waiver of right of removal. A right of removal under an agreement may be lost by waiver.[48]

§ 14. —— Implied Agreements

a. In general
b. From making of chattel mortgage
c. From conditional character of sale
d. From annexation under license

a. In General

An agreement preserving the character of articles annexed to land as personalty or conferring a right of removal may be implied from the circumstances.

The agreement preserving the character of a chattel to be annexed to the realty as personalty or giving a right of removal with respect thereto may be implied from the circumstances.[49] Thus the making of such an agreement before annexation may be inferred from the recognition by the landowner, subsequently thereto, of rights in another person,[50] and even, under some circumstances, from his mere acquiescence in the act of annexation.[51]

b. From Making of Chattel Mortgage

A chattel mortgage on articles to be annexed to the realty has been held the equivalent of an agreement preserving the character of the articles as personalty.

The giving of a mortgage on articles before their annexation to the land of the mortgagor has been held to be equivalent to an agreement by him that they shall remain personalty for the purpose of the mortgage.[52]

c. From Conditional Character of Sale

An agreement preserving the character of the chattel or conferring a right to remove it may be implied from a conditional sales contract reserving title in the conditional seller.

Where articles are sold on the condition that the title shall not pass until they are paid for, or until some other condition is fulfilled, their annexation to the realty of the purchaser does not render them a part of the realty and irremovable, but an agreement preserving the character of the articles as personalty or reserving the right of removal thereof is implied,[53] it being said occasionally, however, that the conditional vendor has a right of removal

When buyer's obligation to seller is discharged, the property reverts to its normal condition as a fixture and becomes part of the realty.—Lesser v. Bridgeport-City Trust Co., 198 A. 252, 124 Conn. 59, 123 A.L.R. 687.

A right of removal under a conditional sales contract may be lost by the vendor declaring the whole unpaid balance due absolutely as a debt, and foreclosing and selling the whole of the property as real estate of the debtor and mortgagor, who had given a real estate mortgage on the whole of the property as additional security for the debt.—St. Paul Trust Co. v. Provisions of mortgage
(1) An agreement preserving the status of the chattel was inferred where the mortgage provided that the article should be treated as personalty and that it should be subject to seizure and sale as a chattel on the nonpayment of the debt.—Sword v. Lowe, 13 N.E. 826, 122 Ill. 487.
(2) It does not seem, however, that a lack of a provision as to the status of the chattel would be material.—Sisson v. Hibbard, 10 Hun 420, affirmed 75 N.Y. 542.

because the purchaser of the chattel, not being the owner thereof, had no right to annex it, see infra § 24.

That a mortgage is taken on the land, to secure the purchase price of the article, the payment of which was the condition of the sale, has been held not to affect the right of the conditional vendor as regards the article.[54]

d. From Annexation under License

An agreement preserving the character of chattels to be attached to realty or conferring a right to remove them may be inferred from the fact that the attachment is pursuant to license or permission of the owner of the realty.

An agreement that the article annexed shall retain the character of personalty, and be removable as such, is ordinarily implied from the fact that the article or structure was annexed or erected by the license or permission of the landowner.[55]

However, it is not a necessary implication from such license or permission, and will not be inferred when a contrary understanding or agreement appears to exist.[56] Thus the fact that the person making the annexation has himself an interest in the land has been regarded as tending to exclude any inference of an agreement for removal based on the permission of the other owner,[57] a principle which is apparently applied in the case of annexations by a purchaser of the land, in possession thereof, made by permission of the vendor, discussed infra § 43.

Annexation by railroad on right of way. Annexations by a railroad company under express permission, or by force of the grant to it of a right of way, have been regarded as retaining their personal character.[58]

Buildings

(1) If a building is erected on land with the landowner's permission, an agreement is implied that it remains the property of the builder in the absence of circumstances showing a contrary intent.—Williamson v. Pye, Tex.Civ.App., 18 S.W.2d 707.

(2) Under Civ.Code art 21 it was held that an agreement whereunder a father erected a building on his children's land in return for the use of the premises must be interpreted according to equity because there is no positive law governing it, and that as so interpreted the building became part of the realty belonging to the children and did not belong to the father.—Bank of Terrebonne v. "It is the general rule that, where the superstructure of a railroad is placed upon the land of another, the railroad company cannot be said to have intended to attach the rails and other appliances to the land so as to make them a part thereof, and the rule ordinarily applies to side tracks and spurs constructed by the company to aid it in the discharge of its obligations as a public carrier, as well as to those constructed for the purpose of accommodating the owners of manufacturing and like enterprises situated along or near its main line."—Helena & Livingston Smelting & Reduction Co. v. clude a claim that, having been made by permission, they are removable as personalty.[59] However, a grant of permission by one lacking in jural capacity is ineffective for this purpose.[60]

Revocation of the license under which the article was annexed to the land does not in itself deprive the licensee of the right of removal, he being entitled to a reasonable time in which to remove the article.[61] Where a railroad company furnishing materials for construction of a spur track by a mining company on the latter's property without agreement as to the ownership of such track is a mere licensee, it cannot remove the track unless the license is revoked directly on notice by the mining company, or indirectly by cessation of the mining operations which involve use of the track.[62]

Cessation of occupation or intention to cease occupation, on the part of the person who annexed the article or structure, does not deprive him of the right of removal within a reasonable time.[63]

§ 15. —— As between Landlord and Tenant

a. In general
b. Stipulations granting right of removal
c. Stipulations restricting right of removal

a. In General

Rights between landlord and tenant with respect to fixtures may be modified, restricted, or extended by agreement.

As a general rule, the rights as between a landlord and tenant with respect to articles or fixtures annexed to the realty, as discussed infra §§ 33–42, may be modified, restricted, or extended by agreement.[64] Agreements conferring right of removal on the tenant are considered infra subdivision b of this section, while agreements restricting such right of removal are considered infra subdivision c of this section.

b. Stipulations Granting Right of Removal

(1) In general
(2) Time of removal and loss of right

(1) In General

Articles annexed to the realty by a tenant may retain their character as personalty or be subject to removal by agreement between the landlord and tenant.

Between landlord and tenant, as between other persons, an article or structure annexed to the land may retain its character as personalty or be subject to removal by the person who made the annexation, in this case the tenant, by reason of an agreement to that effect,[65] and such agreement may so far fix

Agreement implied
(1) Such a stipulation may be inferred from the circumstances.—Galbreath v. Thayer, 113 So. 180, 147 Miss. 556, 53 A.L.R. 288—26 C.J. p 711 note 3.
(2) A provision of a lease that lessee does not have right to remove specified buildings constructed by lessee gives rise to implication that lessee has no right to remove other buildings constructed by him.—Galbreath v. Thayer, supra.
Renewal lease
(1) Notwithstanding fixtures placed by tenant might have become part of realty and belonged to landlord on expiration of original lease, landlord could by subsequent lease waive right thereto and grant the tenant a right to remove the fixtures during new term.—McComish v. Kaufman, 185 P. 476, 43 Cal.App. 507.
(2) Lease provision authorizing lessee to remove "all fixtures, equipment and other property of lessee the rights of the parties with respect thereto as to make inapplicable the common-law rules governing fixtures.[66]

The agreement may be effective, even though entered into after the annexation is complete.[67]

Injury to premises. If there is a stipulation clearly giving to the tenant the right to remove annexations of a named character, the fact that the removal will result in injury to the leased premises is immaterial.[68] The language of the stipulation may, however, call for a different construction.[69] So the fact that the right to remove trade fixtures otherwise existing without regard to agreement, see infra § 38, is provided for by the lease does not enlarge or extend such right so as to allow removal of a fixture which would cause substantial injury to the freehold.[70]

Annexation by consent. In accordance with the rule stated supra § 14 d, the fact that the annexation by the tenant under a lease was with the landlord's consent has occasionally been regarded as justifying the inference of a stipulation for the right of removal.[71] The fact, however, that the tenant has an estate in the land during the existence of which he may enjoy the benefit of the annexation makes the inference less imperative than when he has no estate therein.[72]

Conditional right of removal. Occasionally the lease gives to the tenant in terms the right to remove fixtures only on the performance of some condition precedent on his part.[73] Such a provision has been held to displace the tenant's common-law placed on . . . premises by lessee during term of this or any previous lease" gave lessee right to remove steel structural filling station building erected by lessee during period of previous lease.—Texas Co. v. Cason, 193 S.E. 898, 56 Ga.App. 836.

Subsequent lease

Where landlord's agent represented to prospective tenant that, if tenant bought fixtures from third person, they would remain personal property during and after expiration of lease, fixtures continued to be personal property, although not removed during term.—Looney v. Trimount Theatres, 184 N.E. 683, 282 Mass. 275.

Lease of sprinkler system

Building owner may lawfully contract for installation and lease of fire sprinkler system and agree that contract binds assigns, and that on default lessor of sprinklers may remove or shut off sprinklers.—Phillips Co. v. Wagner, 155 So. 842, 115 Fla. 631.

Machinery

Under agreement giving tenant right to remove machinery, an air hose pipe affixed to a compressor, not attached to the realty, and indispensable to the operation of the compressor, was held a part of compressor, and removable.—Shipler v. Potomac Copper Co., 220 P. 1097, 69 Mont. 86.

Structures erected by tenant

Where lessor and lessee expressly or impliedly so agree, structures placed on leased premises by lessee remain lessee's personal property.—Helvering v. Atlas Life Ins. Co., C.C.A., 78 F.2d 166.

"Tenant's fixtures" defined see supra § 1.

Necessity for writing

(1) As discussed in the C.J.S. title Frauds, Statute of § 74, also 27 C.J. p 196 note 27 [a], and p 239 notes 84, 85, a stipulation granting to the tenant the right to remove an article annexed by him is not within the statute of frauds, and consequently need not be in writing.

(2) However, as stated in Evidence § 919, an agreement conferring a right of removal cannot be added to a lease by parole evidence.

As indicating intent

A provision that the fixtures put in by the tenant were his property and might be removed at the expiration of the lease might not convert into removable fixtures things ordinarily not removable, but the provision emphasizes the intention of the parties that the tenant was about to make additions for the purposes of the business, which would be regarded as fixtures and be removable as such.—In re New York City, 84 N.E. 1105, 192 N.Y. 295, 127 Am.S.R. 903, 18 L.R.A.,N.S., 423, affirming 92 N.Y.S. 8, 101 App.Div. 527.

Payment of rent

(1) A provision for payment of rent due as a condition on the right of removal does not prevent removal of fixtures on vacation of premises before expiration of term without payment of rent to fall due for balance of term, where there is no showing that tenant would not be able to pay rent as it fell due.—Reed Oil Co. v. Schnable, 271 S.W. 957, 168 Ark. 863—26 C.J. p 711 note 7 [b].

(2) A provision that the tenant might remove trade fixtures provided there was no rent in arrear was held to displace the tenant's common-law right of removal, and, the fixtures having been removed by the tenant's receiver in insolvency and sold, the landlord was entitled to a lien on the right of removal discussed infra §§ 33–40, and in effect to restrict it.[74]

Effect as rendering article personalty. The cases are ordinarily to the effect that an article which is annexed by the tenant, subject to a stipulation granting him the right of removal, retains its chattel character, as long as the right of removal continues,[75] as between the parties,[76] although it may lose its chattel character, if so closely annexed as to become an integral part of the land.[77]

There are, however, cases which appear to regard an article annexed by the tenant, even though removable by agreement, as constituting part of the land,[78] at least as to third persons,[79] and occasionally the article so annexed, or the tenant's interest therein, has been referred to as a "chattel real."[80]

(2) Time of Removal and Loss of Right

A tenant's right to remove articles annexed to the realty, conferred by agreement, may be lost under various circumstances as in the case of his failure timely to exercise it.

The tenant's right to remove articles attached to the realty, by reason of express agreement, may be lost by his surrender of the leasehold without exercising his right of removal.[81] It has been held, however, that a mere abandonment of the leasehold does not of itself deprive the tenant of his right to remove the fixtures or vest the lessor with title thereto.[82]

Forfeiture. It has been held that a right of removal conferred by agreement is not lost by reason of a forfeiture of the leasehold,[83] unless the language of the stipulation as to removal otherwise provides.[84]

Effect of new lease. The authorities are not in accord on the effect of a new lease which does not reserve the right of removal on such a right contained in a former lease between the parties. Some of the cases hold that such right of removal is not lost by the lessee's acceptance of a new lease which is silent on the subject,[85] while others hold that, if the lease is renewed without reserving the tenant's rights, he loses the benefit of a provision authorizing the removal of fixtures.[86] Of course, if the proceeds for rent in arrear.—In re Delaware Candy Co., 85 A. 1069, 10 Del.Ch. 142.

(3) The fact, however, that the lease gave a right to remove improvements only "if the conditions of this lease are fully complied with" was held not to render them irremovable in equity because the rent, stipulated to be paid in advance, was thirteen days in arrear before a tender thereof was made.—Estabrook v. Hughes, 1 N.W. 132, 8 Neb. 496.

Casings in producing well

Oil and gas lease giving lessee "the right to remove at any time all machinery and fixtures placed on said premises from any exhausted or dry well or other operation including the right to draw and remove casing" did not entitle lessee to remove casings from a gas or oil producing well, the casing having become a fixture when production was reached.—Wisconsin-Texas Oil Co. v. Clutter, Tex. Civ.App., 258 S.W. 265, reversed on other grounds, Com.App., 268 S.W. 921.

Conditional tender of performance insufficient

A provision that the lessee shall have the right of removal, "all covenants being complied with" on his part, has been regarded as rendering the performance of the covenants a condition precedent to the removal, so that a tender of performance on condition that the lessor would permit the removal was insufficient.—Clemens v. Murphy, 40 Mo. 121—26 C.J. p 711 note 8.

renewal lease or extension of the term is expressly made subject to the same terms and conditions as the original lease, the right of removal is preserved,[87] as it is in a case where a tenant continues to occupy the premises after the term by permission of the lessor under circumstances giving rise to a presumption or inference that the extended term is on the same terms and conditions as the original lease.[88] However, the right to remove is lost by failure timely to act thereon, notwithstanding the tenant continues to occupy the premises without the consent of the landlord.[89]

Time for removal generally. Apart from, or without reference to, any stipulation as to the time when a tenant's right of removal, which has been conferred by agreement, may be exercised, it has been held that, notwithstanding the tenant may be guilty of a technical trespass on the land if he undertakes to remove the fixtures after expiration of his term or after relinquishing possession, he nevertheless retains title to them as personalty.[90] There are cases, however, that hold that, under a right of removal contained in a lease, the removal can be made only during the term of the lease and before relinquishment of possession,[91] or while the tenant is still in possession.[92]

Other cases hold that the right of removal must be exercised within the term, or within a reasonable time thereafter,[93] or within a reasonable time.[94]

Express provision as to time. An express provision as to the period after the expiration of the lease within which the removal is to take place has been regarded as precluding a removal thereafter.[95] However, a provision for removal "at any time" has been construed to permit a removal only within a reasonable time after the expiration of the term, but not thereafter.[96] So, a clause authorizing re-

After termination by abandonment

(1) Lessee had only reasonable time after abandonment within which to remove fixtures whether lease terminated by virtue of its own provisions, or, as a matter of law, as result of abandonment.—Kentucky Block Cannel Coal Co. v. Stacy, 98 S. W.2d 61, 266 Ky. 59.

(2) Lapse of five or six years from date of abandonment by cessation of operations was held unreasonable time precluding removal of fixtures.—Michaels v. Pontius, 137 N.E. 579, 83 Ind.App. 66.

(3) Intention to abandon oil well casing could not be implied from lessee's failure to remove casing, which had been drawn, for fourteen months after lease expired.—Schaffner v. Benson, 166 N.E. 881, 90 Ind. App. 420.

Forfeiture

(1) A right of removal at any time was held to continue a reasonable time after enforcement of forfeiture for nonpayment of rent.—Gartland v. Hickman, 49 S.E. 14, 56 W.Va. 75, 67 L.R.A. 694.

(2) Failure of lessee to remove fixtures within reasonable time after expiration of lease resulted in forfeiture, making them part of the moval "at the end of the term," or "upon termination of the term," has been regarded as enabling the tenant to remove within a reasonable time after the end of the term.[97] The latter clause has also been held to authorize removal before as well as at the end of the term,[98] but not after enforcement by the landlord of a forfeiture for the breach of a condition.[99]

Prevention of removal. As in the case when articles are removable because affixed for purposes of trade, see infra § 41, so when they are removable by express stipulation, the fact that the landlord prevents their removal at the end of the term, or induces the tenant, by act or word, not to remove them, is to be considered in determining whether the articles were removed with a sufficient degree of promptitude.[1]

c. Stipulations Restricting Right of Removal

A tenant's right to remove articles annexed by him to the leased premises may be restricted or extinguished by agreement with his landlord.

A tenant's right to remove fixtures annexed to the realty by the tenant, as discussed infra §§ 33–40, may be restricted or extinguished by express agreement between the landlord and tenant,[2] and, as dis-realty and vesting the owner of the fee with title thereto.—Terry v. Crosswy, Tex.Civ.App., 264 S.W. 718.

(2) That lessor terminated many leases on the same day, thus making it impossible for tenants to obtain moving facilities, was held not an accident or mistake entitling lessees to relief against forfeiture of buildings which they were entitled to remove, where, if tenants had acted separately, some of them might have removed their buildings within time, and where the inability to move the buildings was due to delay of tenants, acting in concert, in securing new lots for the buildings.—Dwelly v. Lease, providing that building and all appurtenant fixtures and equipment should be deemed attached to freehold, did not cover restaurant equipment readily removable without permanently damaging freehold.—Mine Realty Corporation v. 2131 Broadway Corporation, 1 N.Y.S.2d 979, 253 App.Div. 299.

Grandstand
Lessor's right to grandstand erected by tenant under terms of lease does not include seats fastened to grandstand by screws and easily removable.—Handlan v. Stifel, Mo. App., 232 S.W. 245.

Trade fixtures not within agreement
Provision in lease that lessee might not without written consent of lessors remove any of buildings then on the land did not preclude removal by tenant of trade fixtures placed by tenant on premises.—Moffat v. White, 279 N.W. 732, 203 Minn. 47.

Receiver of tenant bound
(1) As respects whether manufacturing equipment installed in plant by original lessee belonged to lessor or receivers of corporation which had assumed covenants of lease, receivers stood in position of original lessee and were bound by such covenants.—Union Bldg. Co. of Pennsylvania v. Pennell, C.C.A.Pa., 78 F.2d 959.

(2) Lessor's waiver of right to claim default against lessee's receiver was held not to destroy lessor's right under lease to recover furnishings on termination of lease.—Beach cussed supra subdivision b of this section, a conditional right of removal in the tenant may operate to restrict rather than to enlarge his common-law right of removal.

Construction generally. Clauses restricting the tenant's right of removal should be strictly construed[3] in favor of the tenant,[4] and cannot be extended by implication.[5] Plain terms expressive of a clear intent that trade fixtures placed on the leased premises by the tenant shall become property of the lessor are required before such construction will be adopted.[6]

The sense in which the parties used the words constituting the restrictive clause must be determined from the agreement as a whole.[7]

Delivery of premises in repair or condition. It has been held that a covenant by the lessee to yield up the premises in repair should not, in the ordinary case, preclude the tenant from removing fixtures which he is otherwise entitled to remove.[8] So a covenant to keep in repair all buildings and erections, and to surrender them at the end of the lease, has been held to apply only to buildings and erections previously on the land and those subsequently placed there by the lessor.[9] On the other hand, the fact that the removal of an article annexed would involve an injury to the premises leased has been regarded as rendering applicable a covenant to deliver up the premises in as good condition as at the time of the lease, so as to preclude removal.[10]

Purchase option to lessee. That the lessee is given an option to purchase the premises at a price named does not prevent the removal by the tenant of fixtures annexed by him which are ordinarily removable.[11] However, where the lessee actually agreed to purchase the premises and subsequently annexed fixtures, he was regarded as making the annexation as purchaser and not as tenant and as not having the right of removal.[12]

When the lease, while giving the lessee the right to purchase the premises at a certain price, provided that, should he fail to do so, the fixtures should go to the lessor, the fact that the lessee agreed to purchase the premises was held not to entitle him to the fixtures if he made default in payment of the price.[13]

Sale or option to lessor. The right to remove existing fixtures by virtue of an agreement may be surrendered by agreement,[14] as where tenant agrees not to remove the property at the termination of the lease, but to sell it to the lessor.[15]

An option in the lessor to appropriate any alterations and improvements has been held not to require him to give notice of his exercise of the option at the time that the alterations and improvements were made, it being sufficient that a notice to that effect was given four weeks before the end of the term.[16]

Provision for valuation. Where the landlord was, by the terms of the lease, required either to grant an extension of the term or to take the fixtures at a valuation, that he did grant an extension was held not to affect the tenant's right to remove trade fixtures at the end of the extended term.[17]

That the lease provided for the purchase of the fixtures by the landlord at a valuation was regarded as not affecting the tenant's right of removal if the landlord took no steps to effect the purchase.[18]

Stipulations as to "improvements." A clause giving to the lessor all "improvements" placed by the tenant on the premises has been regarded as including every addition, alteration, erection, or annexation, made by the lessee, "improvements" being said to be a more comprehensive term than "fixtures."[19] However, the term "improvements" has also been treated as synonymous with "fixtures."[20]

It has been said or held that to be an "improvement" the article must savor of the realty,[21] and to be so attached as to become a part of the realty.[22] Hence it does not include mere loose articles about the premises in no way attached to the freehold.[23]

It has been regarded as including,[24] and not including,[25] trade fixtures.

The word "improvements" may obviously be limited in scope by other language of the instrument.[26]

Stipulations as to "fixtures." The word "fixtures," used in a stipulation providing for the same to go to the lessor on expiration of the term, does not ordinarily include articles not actually annexed to the soil.[27]

In a stipulation that the tenant should not remove "any repairs, improvements, additions or fixtures," the word "fixtures" was held to apply only to permanent ameliorations, such as were covered by the other words used, and not to include trade fixtures.[28]

Stipulated improvements by tenant. Unless qualified by other provisions,[29] a provision in the lease that the lessee shall make improvements of a certain character is ordinarily construed as precluding him from removing them at the end of the term, it being presumed that such a provision is intended to benefit the lessor, and no such benefit accruing to him if the improvements are removable.[30]

"Erections" and "additions." It has been held that a covenant by the lessee to deliver up at the end of the term "all future erections or additions" to or on the premises did not preclude the removal of trade fixtures, but was to be confined to new buildings erected, or old buildings added to, during the term.[31]

A provision that any addition or alteration to a certain frame building on the premises should belong to the lessor was construed as not applying to a brick engine house, not connected with the building except by belts and shafting, transmitting power to machinery in the building.[32]

Alterations. Occasionally the word "alterations" is used in a stipulation of this character either by itself[33] or in connection with "improvements" or other words of the same general character.[34]

Conditional clause. If the lease merely gives the fixtures to the landlord on the happening of a particular contingency,[35] or merely a right to take them at a valuation named or to be named,[36] he acquires, it seems, no title thereto until the contingency happens or payment is made. A stipulation that the fixtures annexed by the tenant shall become the landlord's property in case the tenant makes default in the payment of rent has been regarded in equity as merely creating a lien for the rent on the fixtures[37] while at law the landlord has been regarded as entitled to take possession on the tenant's default.[38]

Title to articles during term. When it is stipulated that articles or structures, ordinarily removable by the tenant, shall belong to the landlord on the expiration of the term, the latter, it seems, acquires a vested interest in such articles or structures immediately on their annexation,[39] which interest is capable of transfer.[40] However, it has been held that a tenant's repudiation of the provision before expiration of the term does not constitute a transfer of title to the landlord with a right of possession.[41]

The tenant cannot remove the article before the expiration of the term,[42] nor can he affect the landlord's rights by undertaking to transfer the fixtures to a third person.[43]

The removal of things annexed or erected under such a stipulation has been regarded as waste,[44] but it has also been said that for such a removal the remedy is by action on the contract rather than by an action for waste.[45]

The lessee is under no obligation in such a case to replace the fixture, for the benefit of the landlord, if destroyed by fire.[46]

Although the tenant is precluded by his agreement from removing the fixture, he has an interest therein to the same extent as in the land itself, which is the subject of mortgage by him.[47]

Agreement construed as not prohibiting removal during term

(1) A lease for a long term of years, providing that at the expiration of the term the lessee should surrender the premises "with all improvements, additions and extensions without any compensation to be paid for said improvements, additions and extensions," vested title only to such improvements as remained when the lease was terminated, and the lessee could remove trade fixtures while the lease remained in force.—In re Montello Brick Works, D.C.Pa., 163 F. 624, affirmed Montello Brick Co. v. § 16. —— In Favor of Third Persons

Articles annexed to the realty but retaining their character as personalty by agreement may be mortgaged and sold as such.

The articles or structures being, by virtue of the agreement, regarded as personalty distinct from the land, they may, it has been decided, be mortgaged and sold as such, so as to give to the mortgagee or purchaser a good title thereto as against the landowner,[48] with the same right of removal as the agreement accorded the original owner.[49]

§ 17. —— As against Third Persons in General

a. In general

b. Statutory provisions affecting agreements

a. In General

Innocent third persons without notice are usually not affected by agreements preserving the chattel character of articles annexed to the realty or conferring a right of removal with respect to such articles.

Apart from statute, it is usually held or stated, as a general rule, that, although the parties may, as between themselves, agree that chattels to be annexed to realty shall remain personalty or be subject to a right of removal, see supra §§ 12–15, such agreements cannot ordinarily affect the rights of innocent third persons without notice thereof,[50] while, on the other hand, such agreements will bind third persons having actual or constructive notice thereof,[51] provided the fixture can be removed without material injury to the realty.[52]

b. Statutory Provisions Affecting Agreements

For a conditional sales contract reserving title in the conditional vendor as to chattels to be annexed to the realty to be valid as against third persons, statutes in some jurisdictions require the agreement to be filed or recorded in accord with their provisions, or, in some instances, to be assented to by persons affected.

Statutes exist in some jurisdictions which regulate the rights of parties with respect to conditional sales of articles to be annexed to real estate by providing for assent to, or the filing or recording of, such agreements as against third persons generally or as against particular classes of persons specified.[53] While it has been held that the statute, not the law of fixtures, controls the rights of the parties in situations covered thereby,[54] it has also

Elements controlling
(1) Law relating to conditional sales alters general rule that intent determined whether chattels affixed to realty became fixtures.—Crown v. Regna Const. Co., 146 A. 346, 104 N.J.Eq. 469, affirmed, Err. & App., 150 A. 918.
(2) Under statute, neither intention with which chattel is annexed to realty nor use to which chattel is appropriated determines efficacy of conditional sales agreement, but test is whether detachment will materially injure freehold.—Bank of America Nat. Ass'n v. La Reine Hotel Corporation, 156 A. 28, 108 N.J.Eq. 567.

been held that the basic law of fixtures has not been changed by such a statute,[55] at least with respect to matters not coming within its purview,[56] the law of fixtures being merely restricted in its application.[57]

The theory or purpose of these statutes is to afford protection to persons dealing with the realty to which articles sold conditionally are attached as well as to conditional sellers who comply with the requirements of the statutes.[58]

Where particular classes of third persons are afforded protection by the statute, filing or recording thereunder is essential or effective only as to persons coming within the classes designated.[59]

Nature of article annexed as factor. The protection accorded by some of the statutes applies only to such chattels as, but for the agreement, would become part of the realty.[60]

A further distinction is made under some of the statutes, such as the Uniform Conditional Sales Act § 7, between fixtures which cannot be removed without material injury to the freehold and those which can be so removed. Assent of the persons interested is essential to protect the conditional seller in the former case,[61] while appropriate filing or recording is necessary in the latter case.[62]

Statute in derogation of common law
The statute concerning conditional sales of chattels attached, or to be attached, to realty and regulating the filing and effect of conditional sales contracts is an enactment in derogation of the common law in so far as it purports to fix by contract the character of fixtures annexed to realty.—Land Title Bank & Trust Co. v. What constitutes material injury to freehold. Under these statutes the important consideration is whether the fixture can be removed without material injury to the freehold.[64] In construing "material injury to the freehold," as used in the Uniform Conditional Sales Act § 7, the courts have held it in one sense to mean physical injury,[65] while in another sense, injury to the institution of which the structure, to which the chattel is attached, is a part.[66] In the latter sense, some courts have held that there is such an injury as to chattels which have become part of a structure if severance will prevent the structure from being used for the purposes for which it was erected or to which it has been adapted.[67]

Filing as ordinary conditional sale insufficient

Under Uniform Conditional Sales Act, conditional seller of fixtures should not get protection by filing contract with ordinary conditional sale contracts and making a record similar to that made in the case of chattel mortgages.—In re Brownsville Brewing Co., C.C.A.Pa., 117 F.2d 463.

Description of realty

(1) Where neither the statement accompanying filed contract, nor the contract, nor statement of refiling accurately described the realty by street or street numbers, the filing was invalid.—In re Brownsville Brewing Co., supra.

(2) Where statement of refiling of contract for conditional sale of fixtures contained a fuller description than that contained in original statement and contract, but description merely added one correct street designation to prior incorrect designations, and where three years had elapsed at time of refiling since the original sale, and a state receivership had superseded buyer in operation of its business, insufficiency of original filing was not cured by the refiling.—In re Brownsville Brewing Co., supra.

(3) The filing of an agreement showing conditional sale of bottling machine to brewing company at designated Pennsylvania town in which brewery had been erected in five buildings on three contiguous parcels of land, each of which was encumbered with a separate mortgage, did not comply with statute providing for filing of contract with statement briefly describing realty.—In re Yough Brewing Co., D.C.Pa., 27 F. Supp. 729.

Time of filing

Filing under the Pennsylvania statute must be within reasonable time from the sale and delivery of the fixtures.—In re Brownsville Brewing Co., C.C.A.Pa., 117 F.2d 463.

"Freehold" defined

The word "freehold," as used in the act, refers to the freehold as of the time as of which the inquiry is made. It may mean before or after annexation according as the identity of the chattel is lost or not.—Bank of America Nat. Ass'n v. La Reine Hotel Corporation, 156 A. 28, 108 N.J.Eq. 567.

§ 18. —— As against Subsequent Purchaser or Mortgagee of Land

a. In general
b. With notice
c. Without notice
d. What constitutes notice
e. Statutory provisions affecting agreements

a. In General

The agreement between the seller and purchaser of a chattel to be annexed to the realty is not in itself determinative of the character of the article as a fixture as against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the realty.

It has been said that in determining whether or not an article installed in a building becomes a fixture or remains personalty as to a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the real estate, the agreement between the seller of the article and the purchaser thereof plays no part, it may however, as discussed in the following subdivisions of this section have a determinative effect as to parties charged with notice.[70]

b. With Notice

Apart from statute, an agreement between the parties, preserving the character of articles to be annexed to realty or giving a right of removal with respect thereto, is valid as against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the realty with notice, at least as to chattels which are removable without material injury to the freehold.

Apart from statute, the authorities are generally in accord that an agreement preserving the character of a chattel to be annexed to realty, or conferring a right of removal with respect thereto, prevails as against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the realty who has notice, actual or constructive, of the agreement,[71] where, or provided, it is sometimes held, the chattel can be removed without material injury to the freehold or the usefulness of the chattel.[72] This rule has been applied as against purchasers at a judicial sale.[73]

The purchaser of the land with notice, however, does not take subject to the agreement, it has been held, if his vendor was, without notice thereof,[74] applying the generally recognized rule, discussed in the C.J.S. title Vendor and Purchaser § 360, also 66 C.J. p 1188 note 58, to the effect that a purchaser with notice of an outstanding title or interest is protected if his vendor acquired title without notice.

c. Without Notice

Ordinarily and apart from statute, an agreement preserving the character of an article to be annexed to the realty, which would otherwise be a fixture, or giving a right of removal with respect thereto, is not effective against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the realty without notice.

(1) "The reason for the rule is that an integral part of the consideration paid by the purchaser was on the faith of the chattel . . . being a fixture, as it appeared to be, and that he would be prejudiced by the severance of the chattel from the freehold."—Industrial Bank of Richmond v. Holland Furnace Co., 153 S.E. 309, 310, 109 W.Va. 176.

(2) "This rule is based on the fact that the subsequent incumbrancer has been misled by the fact that the conditional vendor has permitted the chattels to become attached to the realty so as to have ostensibly become a part thereof."—Dauch v. Ginsburg, 6 P.2d 952, 954, 214 Cal. 540.

(3) "The reason for the rule has been stated to be based on two grounds. The first is that the seller, voluntarily placing personal property in the possession and control of his vendee with knowledge that it would be affixed to the land if put to the use for which it is designed, is presumed to have agreed that it should be or might be converted into realty. The second reason is that where one of two innocent persons must suffer, he should bear the loss who caused the deceitful appearances."—Peninsula Burner & Oil Co. v. McCaw, 3 P.2d 40, 41, 116 Cal.App. 569.

Oral reservation

As against bona fide purchaser from grantee, an oral exception of fixture between grantor and grantee is a nullity.—Muir v. Jones, 31 P. 646, 23 Or. 332, 19 L.R.A. 441.

Bona fide purchaser without notice

(1) Bona fide purchaser of realty without notice of recorded contract reserving title to bathroom fixtures acquired title to fixtures.

N.J.—James Leo Co. v. Jersey City Bill Posting Co., 73 A. 1046, 78 N. J.Law 150.

(2) Mortgagee purchasing realty at his own foreclosure sale is not bona fide purchaser.—Mallory v. Agee, 147 So. 881, 226 Ala. 596, 88 A.L.R. 1107.

(3) Mortgagee as purchaser at his own sale, under power of sale generally see the C.J.S. title Mortgages § 594, also 41 C.J. p 1009 notes 78, 79.

Agreement recordable

Where personalty, designed for such purpose, is affixed to realty, it is brought under operation of laws for recording contracts affecting realty.—Bell v. Mortgage Guarantee Co., 292 P. 660, 109 Cal.App. 203.

Purchaser at foreclosure sale

(1) A purchaser at a foreclosure sale is held to be within the protection of the rule.

Ohio.—Holland Furnace Co. v. Trumbull Savings & Loan Co., 19 N.E. 2d 273, 135 Ohio St. 48—Concrete Silo Co. v. Warstler, 198 N.E. 189, 50 Ohio App. 334.

(2) This is not so as to a secured creditor purchasing the realty for a nominal sum at his own foreclosure sale.—Industrial Bank of Richmond v. Holland Furnace Co., 153 S.E. 309, 109 W.Va. 176.

Right of removal under lease

Purchasers without notice are unaffected by an agreement made between the owner of the chattel and a lessee of the land for whose benefit the articles were annexed.

est in the land,[77] a view which is based, in some of the cases, and to some extent, on the theory that the beneficiary under the agreement consented to the annexation of the article to the land, or had reason to know that such annexation would be made, and thereby aided in clothing the vendor or mortgagor of the land with the apparent title.[78] However, there are some early cases which have stated the rule to be that, apart from statute requiring filing or recording of the agreement, a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee cannot claim the articles annexed, although ignorant of the agreement by which they were to retain their personal character.[79]

d. What Constitutes Notice

Timely actual notice or knowledge of the agreement or of such information with respect thereto as imposes a duty of making inquiry is usually required to render the agreement effective against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the realty. Certain public records of the agreement sometimes constitutes sufficient notice.

For an agreement preserving the character of the chattel or conferring a right of removal to be effective as against a subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the realty, he usually must have either actual notice or knowledge of the agreement or rights thereunder, or such reliable information with respect thereto as to impose on him a duty of making inquiry,[80] if such notice or knowledge is obtained

Chattels necessary to operation of machinery attached to realty are within protection of rule.—J. H. Day Co. v. Public Sav. Ins. Co. of America, 151 N.E. 361, 85 Ind.App. 78.

Permanent buildings pass to vendee of land without knowledge that buildings belong to another.—Burbridge v. Therrell, 148 So. 204, 110 Fla. 6, followed in 154 So. 926, 114 Fla. 772.

Presumption of agreement

Seller under conditional sales contract, delivering personalty designed for being affixed to land, is presumed to have agreed that it may be converted into real property.—Bell v. Mortgage Guarantee Co., 292 P. 660, 109 Cal.App. 203.

Bailment with option to purchase

Company permitting electric refrigerator, delivered by it to apartment building owner as bailee with option to purchase, to remain in building, apparently as fixture, after execution of warranty and trust deeds of realty without notice to grantee and mortgagee of such delivery, cannot say in bailor's replevin suit that it is not fixture.—Glueck & Co. v. Duty to inquire generally

(1) Purchaser at foreclosure sale of land had duty to inquire regarding machine attached to cement block which would disclose that machine was chattel conditionally sold and not fixture.—Catlin v. C. E. Rosenbaum Machinery Co., 22 S.W.2d 906, 180 Ark. 739.

(2) Purchaser of real estate, without inquiry, held not innocent purchaser as bearing on issue whether gin elevator belonged to vendor.—Continental Gin Co. v. Clement, 4 S. W.2d 901, 176 Ark. 864.

(3) Where mortgagee received mortgage subsequent to mortgagor's agreement with tenant that tenant at termination of tenancy might remove sheds and fencing placed by him upon premises, tenant was entitled to remove such fixtures as against claim of mortgagee which failed to make inquiry concerning that matter.—Penn Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Kimble, 272 N.W. 231, 132 Neb. 408.

Acceptance of chattel mortgage

Purchaser of land who accepted chattel mortgage from a former purchaser of the land to whom it was sold under a conditional sale was held to be charged with notice that it was to be regarded as personalty and hence took subject to the conditional sale.—Lansing Iron & Engine Works v. Wilbur, 69 N.W. 667, 111 Mich. 413, explained in Wickes v. Hill, 73 N.W. 375, 115 Mich. 333.

Installation by tenant

Notice that articles were installed by tenant under lease held to charge purchaser with notice that the articles were possibly removable by the tenant as trade fixtures, and so with notice that they belonged to the conditional vendor from whom they were bought by such tenant.—Marker v. Williams, 179 P. 735, 39 Cal.App. 674.

Occupancy of building

(1) That one licensed to erect a building on another's land is in occupation of such building has been regarded as not constituting notice of his claim of title to the building.

Chattel mortgage or conditional sales records. Apart from statutes dealing with the filing or recording of chattel mortgages or conditional sales involving fixtures, the proper filing or recording of such instruments under statutes covering chattels generally has sometimes been held to be sufficient to charge the subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the realty with constructive notice thereof,[82] but it has also been held that such filing or recording is insufficient to constitute notice, usually because the purchaser or mortgagee of the realty has been considered to be under no obligation to search the records of chattel mortgages or conditional sales in order to discover whether any article annexed to the land was subjected to a mortgage lien before its annexation.[83] A distinction is sometimes made between chattels which do not necessarily become merged with the realty by incorporation therewith and which are susceptible of retaining their character as personalty, and those which become integrated with the realty or are incapable of removal without material injury to the realty, such filing or recording being held to be constructive notice as to the former,[84] but not as to the latter.[85]

In any state, it seems that one who purchases or takes a mortgage of a chattel which is subsequently annexed to land is charged with notice of a prior chattel mortgage by the record thereof.[86]

Record in land records. In some states the agreement for removal, if properly acknowledged, would be capable of record among the land records, and if it specifically refers to the land a subsequent purchaser would be affected with notice thereof,[87] right of occupancy; but there it would stop. His possession would not be notice of a right to remove or put a purchaser upon inquiry as to that question, because such a right does not, ipso facto, go with a right of occupancy, but depends upon a separate agreement in no way connected with the possession of the building or the title to the land."—Dunscott Land Co. v. Brewer, supra.

Operation of telegraph line

The fact that a telegraph line on a railroad right of way was being operated by a telegraph company was sufficient notice of the claim of such company to the line.—Western Union Tel. Co. v. Burlington & S. W. R. Co., C.C.Iowa, 11 F. 1, 3 McCrary 130.

Recital in deed

Under a statute requiring inquiry to be made under certain circumstances, recital in deed obligating purchaser to pay notes due for refrigeration equipment held notice of claim to subsequent purchaser of realty.—Shippen v. Georgia Power Co., 159 S.E. 268, 172 Ga. 913.

Reason for rule

"The presence of such fixtures in quantity should put a prospective purchaser of the land upon inquiry as to their history. Instruments covering property of that character, even if separately recorded pursuant to the express provisions of the statute in the chattel mortgage book, cannot be said to be instruments which are not in the line of the title of the real estate to which such property may be annexed as fixtures."—Liddell Co. v. Cork, 113 S.E. 327, 330, 120 S.C. 481.

Mortgage of buildings

The assignee of a duly recorded mortgage on two houses subsequently moved to mortgagor's lots to which it was understood, at the time of the execution of the mortgage, they were to be moved, such agreement being recited in the mortgage, was entitled to foreclosure against a subsequent purchaser of the lots, at least as to the houses.—Doyle v. statutes in some jurisdictions expressly so providing.[88]

e. Statutory Provisions Affecting Agreements

Some statutes expressly provide for filing or recording in accord with their provisions to render a conditional sales agreement involving articles to be attached to the realty effective as against subsequent purchasers or mortgagees of the realty.

Under the statutes in effect in some jurisdictions, a reservation of title or right of removal in a conditional sale contract with respect to chattels to be attached or affixed to the realty is void as to subsequent purchasers or mortgagees for value without notice unless the sales contract is properly filed or recorded in accord with the statute in the place where deeds affecting the realty would be recorded.[89] Filing or recording in accord with the statute will protect the conditional vendor as against

Lease of fixture

Where mining machinery leased under written rental agreement was to be attached to land and would become part of realty but for provisions of lease, rental agreement was within scope of statute authorizing recording of any "instrument affecting title to or possession of real property."—Western Machinery Co. v. Graetz, 108 P.2d 711, 42 Cal.App. 2d 296.

Reservation in recorded deed

Recorded deed containing exception and reservation as to fixtures was notice to subsequent purchaser of grantor's interest in fixtures.—Kennedy v. City of Hood River, 259 P. 911, 122 Or. 531.

Effect of nonrecordation

Where lease of personal property to be attached to realty was unrecorded, although it could have been recorded under the statute, fact of nonrecordation would not of itself be a defense to a bona fide encumbrancer as would be the situation were a conditional sales contract involved, but proof of the existence of notice would still be necessary.—Western Machinery Co. v. Graetz, 108 P.2d 711, 42 Cal.App.2d 296.

88. In Texas

(1) Under the Texas statute an instrument reserving title or conferring a lien on machinery or other manufactured articles susceptible of being attached to realty in such manner as to become fixtures, recorded in the county where the realty is located in such manner as the statute specifies, constitutes notice which protects such reservation or lien.—Texas Power & Light Co. v. Malone, Civ.App., 42 S.W.2d 845, error dismissed.

(2) Thereunder a record of chattel mortgage not describing realty to which mortgaged machinery was attached was not notice to subsequent purchasers or mortgagees of realty.—Texas Power & Light Co. v. Malone, supra—Schumann v. Jenkins, Civ.App., 40 S.W.2d 214, error refused.

subsequent purchasers or mortgagees,[90] even if without actual notice or knowledge of the seller's rights.[91] On the other hand, subsequent purchasers or mortgagees who have actual notice or knowledge of the conditional seller's rights prior to acquiring their interest in the realty are not protected by the seller's failure to file under the statute.[92]

Nature of article annexed as factor. The protection of the statute as to both the vendor and subsequent purchaser or mortgagee is accorded only with respect to chattels coming within the terms of the statute.[93] Under statutes, such as Uniform Conditional Sales Act § 7, the protection accorded either to the conditional vendor or the subsequent purchaser of the realty is only as to chattels which but for the agreement would become fixtures when affixed to the realty,[94] if severable without material

"The statute is concerned not with whether the articles remain personal property after attachment to the real estate, but only with the question whether they have in fact been wrought into or attached to it. That there may not have been an intention to make the attachment permanent is not material."—Gar Wood Industries v. Colonial Homes, supra.

Test

"The word 'attached,' followed . . . by 'whether they are fixtures at common law or not,' means something more than annexed to the realty by . . . tenuous connections. . . . There must be something in the connection to indicate a bonding intended to permanent rather than temporary relationship between realty and the article in question. Sealing necessary to obtain a tight junction should not necessarily determine whether an attachment is or is not within the statute."—Gardner v. Buckley & Scott, 181 N.E. 802, 804, 280 Mass. 106.

Oil storage tank and oil burner installed in dwelling house under unregistered "rental agreement" held not within statute, and, because it remained personalty, did not pass to bona fide mortgagee and parties claiming under mortgagee.—Gardner v. Buckley & Scott, supra.

Soda fountain was wrought into or attached to real estate within statute requiring recordation of conditional sale contract.—American Soda Fountain Co. v. Parsons, C.C.A.Mass., 32 F.2d 737.

97. Additional statement necessary

(1) The Uniform Conditional Sales Act, in effect in a number of jurisdictions, requires a statement signed by the seller briefly describing the realty and stating that the goods are, or are to be, affixed thereto to be filed together with the conditional sales contract or a copy thereof.—Capital Motion Picture Supply Corporation v. Mapes-Bergen Amusements, 187 A. 161, 117 N.J.Law 185—Public Service Electric Gas Co. v. Sanford, 161 A. 507, 10 N.J.Misc. 885.

(2) Mere filing of conditional sales agreement does not protect title of conditional seller as against subsequent purchaser of realty.—Capital Motion Picture Supply Corporation v. Mapes-Bergen Amusements, supra—General Motors Acceptance Corporation v. Capital Associates, 158 A. 107, 108 N.J.Law 421, affirmed 164 A. 20, 110 N.J.Law 61.

(3) Statement that equipment should be delivered and not removed without seller's written consent, held not to meet requirements of statute.—Capital Motion Picture Supply Corporation v. Mapes-Bergen Amusements, supra.

(4) Recorded statement correctly describing premises in which electric refrigerator was installed by lot and plot number on municipal assessment map, held sufficient notice of sale contract to subsequent purchaser of realty, though incorrectly stating street number and name, in such case the description of premises by lot and plot number on municipal map prevailing over conflicting description by street name and number.—Public Service Electric Gas Co. v. Sanford, supra.

Form and contents sufficient.—Harvard Financial Corporation v. Greenblatt Const. Co., 184 N.E. 748, 261 N.Y. 169, reversing 258 N.Y.S. 993, 236 App.Div. 742, motion denied 185 N.E. 796, 261 N.Y. 694.

Place

Filing is generally required to be in the manner that, and at the place

General conditional sales statutes. In some jurisdictions a failure to file or record a conditional sale contract, under statutes dealing with conditional sales generally, renders it ineffective as against an innocent purchaser or mortgagee of the realty to which articles involved have been annexed.[98]

§ 19. —— As against Prior Mortgagee of Land

a. In general
b. Effect of after-acquired property clause
c. Notice and record
d. Injury by removal
e. Article becoming essential or integral part of realty
f. Article substituted for another
g. Statutes regulating rights of parties

a. In General

In the absence of statute, an agreement that an article attached to realty shall remain personalty and be removable is generally given full effect as against a prior mortgagee of the land, in so far as removal will not interfere with the security of the prior mortgage.

Subject to statutory modifications, see infra subdivision g of this section, as a general rule, an agreement that an article or structure attached to the realty shall be removable or shall remain personalty, whether expressed, or merely implied from the making of a chattel mortgage thereon, the conditional character of a sale thereof, or its annexation under license, is given full effect as against a mortgage of the realty made previous to annexation, in so far as this will not interfere with the security of such mortgage, the mortgagee not having been misled and having advanced nothing on the faith of such annexation,[99] it being occasional-

Time of filing
(1) Under the Uniform Conditional Sales Act, filing after attachment of a chattel is sufficient if done before the sale or mortgage of the realty.—Harvard Financial Corporation v. Greenblatt Const. Co., 184 N. E. 748, 261 N.Y. 169, reversing 258 N.Y.S. 993, 236 App.Div. 742, motion denied 185 N.E. 796, 261 N.Y. 694.

(2) Filing thereafter is insufficient to protect the conditional seller.—G. Goldberg & Sons v. Gilet Bldg. Corporation, 237 N.Y.S. 258, 135 Misc. 158.

(3) Where elevator company installed elevator under contract by which title was to remain in company until contract price was paid in full, and providing that forty per cent of price was payable when second mortgage was placed, filing of said contract a few days after work of installation was substantially completed did not comply with statute, notwithstanding it was filed before sale in second mortgage foreclosure action, in absence of showing that mortgagee had knowledge of existence of contract, or of fact that elevator had not been paid for in full at time of its installation.—Greene v. Elkins, 235 N.Y.S. 438, 134 Misc. 118.

(4) Where plaintiff, a real estate mortgagee, on Nov. 10, 1938, advanced the last installment of money to defendant owner under a building and loan mortgage, which covered plumbing fixtures, and between Aug. 24, 1938, and Jan. 3, 1939, codefendant sold plumbing materials to defendant owner under a conditional sales agreement dated Dec. 6, 1938, and filed by codefendant Febr. 14, 1939, plaintiff was a "bona fide encumbrancer," within meaning of Personal Property Law, as to materials affixed at time of last advancement.—Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Estates of Cotswold, Limited, 17 N. Y.S.2d 302.

(5) Under statute requiring recording not later than specified number of days after delivery of the property, the time for recording is computed from the date of the first delivery in case of goods delivered from time to time.—Automatic Sprinkler Corporation of America v. Rosen, 156 N.E. 693, 259 Mass. 319.

(6) Thereunder, notice recorded before any part of system was delivered on realty sufficiently complied with statute to entitle conditional seller to enforce agreement as against subsequent realty mortgagee.—Grinnell Co. v. Gardner Trust Co., 193 N.E. 37, 288 Mass. 385.

(7) Under statutes requiring recording within specified time after making of contract, time runs from such date, and not from date of delivery.—Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. v. Arnold, C.C.A.Mass., 282 F. 43.

Refiling unnecessary
One filing in accord with the statute is sufficient to protect the conditional vendor, a refiling under the statute dealing with chattels generally being unnecessary.—In re White Plains Ice Service, C.C.A.N.Y., 109 F.2d 913.

Recording in "conditional sales book" sufficient under some recording statutes.—Treat v. Nowell, 294 P. 273, 37 Ariz. 290.

ly said, more particularly with reference to a claim under a chattel mortgage, as against the subsequent realty mortgage, that the rights of the parties should be adjusted on equitable principles, with a view to the theory that a mortgage attaches only to such interest in the article as the mortgagor acquired, and that this interest is limited by the existence of the chattel mortgage.[1]

In some jurisdictions a contrary view, the Massachusetts rule, prevails, to the effect that it is not in the power of the mortgagor, by any agreement to which the mortgagee is not a party, to affect the rights of the latter as to accessions to the realty, he being no more able to empower another to sever such accessions as against the mortgagee than to sever them himself.[2] However, even where

Agreement before or after mortgagor's default

Right to remove improvement removable without impairing value of realty as it existed when mortgage was executed may be reserved by contract between mortgagor and another, as against mortgagee, whether right to remove was created before or after mortgagor's default.—Mallory v. Agee, 147 So. 881, 226 Ala. 596, 88 A.L.R. 1107.

Extent of mortgagee's right in chattel

Special equitable property right of owner of building in article attached thereto under title reservation contract becomes subject to prior trust deed, but the article itself does not become subject to the deed of trust.—Industrial Bank of Richmond v. Holland Furnace Co., 153 S.E. 309, 109 W.Va. 176.

Consent of mortgagee

Security deed grantee who orally consented to lease provision authorizing lessee to remove improvements made during term was not entitled to injunction against such removal, since consent, although oral, estopped security deed grantee from objecting to removal.—Peachtree Gun Club v. Trimble, 186 S.E. 669, 182 Ga. 630.

In Florida

(1) A conditional seller of personalty attached to a building has a superior right to the chattel as against a prior mortgagee of the land, if the chattel may be removed without substantial damage to the realty.—Standard Finance Co. v. Central Farmers' Trust Co., 157 So. 520, 117 Fla. 217.

(2) In an earlier case, in which the court relied on Meagher v. Hayes, 25 N.E. 105, 152 Mass. 228, 23 Am.S.R. 819, it was stated that the mortgagee's right to sell a building under foreclosure sale as part of the mortgaged realty cannot be affected by agreements in regard thereto, to which the mortgagee was not a party, nor by notice of claims of others given to purchaser at foreclosure sale.—Burbridge v. Annexation by lessee of mortgagor

The rights of the prior mortgagee are superior although the chattels are purchased and installed by the mortgagor's lessee under an agreement for removal by the seller.—Vorsec Co. v. Gilkey, 170 A. 722, 132 Me. 311.

In Maryland

(1) A garage, when erected, was part of freehold covered by lien of this view is adopted, it is recognized that the priority of the realty mortgage in this regard is lost in case the holder of such mortgage assents to the agreement by which the right of removal is reserved.[3] Further, the rule does not apply where the chattel does not become part of the mortgaged premises.[4]

Representations by the conditional vendor of a chattel, made to the mortgagee of the land before the mortgage was made, but after the making of the sale, that the article had been paid for, have been referred to as operating in favor of the mortgagee's claim.[5]

As regards subsequent advances made by the mortgagee after the annexation of the article in question, he is, it seems, in the position of a subsequent mortgagee of the land,[6] and, in most jurisdictions, is, as shown supra § 18, protected as such if without notice of the agreement.

b. Effect of After-Acquired Property Clause

An agreement that chattels annexed to land shall remain personalty and be removable usually is given effect as against a prior mortgagee of the land, although the prior mortgage contains an after-acquired property clause.

The fact that the prior mortgage of the real estate in terms covers after-acquired property, while occasionally referred to in support of a decision giving priority to such mortgage, as against the claim to a chattel annexed,[7] does not appear, even in such cases, to be a controlling factor in the decision, while in other cases it is accorded absolutely no weight.[8] Likewise a provision in the mortgage that articles annexed shall become part of the realty has been regarded as inoperative as against the claim to the article as a chattel.[9]

c. Notice and Record

The claim of the owner of chattels having notice of the existence of a prior mortgage on the realty to which the chattels are annexed may, according to some cases, be subordinated to the claim of the prior mortgagee of the land.

According to some authorities, when a person sells personal property under a condition that it shall remain the property of the seller until paid for, and the seller has notice that the personalty is to be installed in a building subject to a mortgage, mortgage, and provision in contract that title to garage should not pass was not binding on prior mortgagee, where its consent thereto was not obtained.—Bankers' & Merchants' Credit Co. v. Harlem Park Building & Loan Ass'n, 153 A. 64, 160 Md. 230.

(2) It has also been stated that a conditional vendor of fixtures may assert right against prior mortgagee of realty, where removal will not materially injure premises.—Rudolph Wurlitzer Co. v. Cohen, 144 A. 641, 156 Md. 368, 62 A.L.R. 358.

In Wisconsin

(1) A purchase-money chattel mortgage on personalty annexed to mortgaged land is subordinate to the prior mortgage on the realty.—Frankland v. Moulton, 5 Wis. 1.

(2) As between a seller of personalty annexed to the realty and a prior mortgagee of the land, an agreement between the seller and buyer of the chattel for removal is not binding.—Fuller-Warren Co. v. Harter, 85 N.W. 698, 110 Wis. 80, 84 Am. S.R. 867.

(3) A tenant of the mortgagor of land, who annexes chattels to the realty under agreement with the mortgagor that they may be removed, may recover such chattels as against the prior mortgagee of the land, the court stating that it has never approved the Massachusetts rule so broadly as to give preference to a prior mortgagee of land over a tenant of the mortgagor, especially where the chattels annexed by the tenant are trade fixtures and may be removed without material injury to the freehold.—Standard Oil Co. v. La Crosse Super Auto Service, 258 N.W. 791, 217 Wis. 237, 99 A.L.R. 60.

Provision making property subject to unpaid price

Where trust deed provided that it was a lien on all machinery now installed and in operation, or that will hereafter be installed and be in operation, "subject to the unpaid purchase price of any hereafter acquired property," property sold under a conditional sales contract remained personalty and conditional vendor's rights were superior.—Wayne Tank & Pump Co. v. 26 C.J. p 686 note 97.

and the chattel is of such a character and is so installed that, if paid for, it would become subject to the mortgage, then it will become subject to the prior mortgage on the building, as against the conditional seller, even though the price is unpaid.[10] There are cases in which the fact that the mortgage, containing an after-acquired property clause, is of record, and that the conditional seller is thereby charged with notice of such clause, is referred to as a consideration of decided significance adverse to the claim of such seller,[11] although this fact is not always of controlling importance.[12]

Notice to the prior mortgagee of the realty that there is a conditional sale contract reserving title to chattels, and that the chattels are annexed to the realty, is not essential to preserve the vendor's right to the chattels.[13] However, the fact that the mortgagee knew of the mortgagor's consent to the erection of a structure by another person with a right of removal in the latter, and made no objection, has been referred to as showing an assent by the mortgagee which would preclude him from claiming the structure under the mortgage.[14]

Record of conditional sale. That the conditional sale of a chattel has not been recorded as provided by statute has ordinarily been regarded as not affecting the question of priority as between the vendor and one claiming under a prior mortgage of the realty to which it is subsequently annexed, a prior mortgagee not being a purchaser for value within the protection accorded by such statute.[15] Occasionally, however, a contrary view has been indicated.[16]

d. Injury by Removal

A chattel mortgagee or conditional seller of chattels may not, as against a prior mortgagee of the land to which the articles are annexed, remove such articles if their removal will cause substantial injury to the realty.

The right of a chattel mortgagee or conditional vendor to claim the article annexed as against the prior mortgagee of the realty has been said to exist only in so far as its removal will not cause substantial injury to the realty,[17] this corresponding with the general rule, discussed supra § 13, limiting the effect of an agreement to give a right of removal. On the other hand, it has been said that if the detachment of the article annexed will occasion some diminution in the value of the freehold, as it would have stood had the attachment not been made, then the depreciation must be made whole and the rights of the parties adjusted according to the equities of the case.[18]

In so far as the doctrine prevails that the mortgagor of the realty cannot, as against the mortgagee, empower a third person to sever accessions to the realty, see supra subdivision a of this section, the question whether the article can be severed from the realty without injury thereto is of no signifiance.[19]

e. Article Becoming Essential or Integral Part of Realty

According to some authorities an agreement that chattels annexed to land shall remain personalty and be removable is not binding on the prior mortgagee of the land where the chattels have become an essential and integral part of the realty.

Even in some of the cases which recognize and assert the rule favoring the person claiming the articles as personalty under an agreement for removal, as against the prior mortgagee of the realty, that rule has been stated not to be applicable in case the articles have, through annexation, become an essential or integral part of the realty.[20] In some cases, however, in which this distinction is referred to, it is assumed that an article is necessarily an integral part of the realty if so annexed that, apart from agreement, it would be a fixture,[21]

(2) Where the removal of the fixtures will substantially damage or injure the security of the prior mortgagee, the rights of the conditional seller must be subordinated, although the articles can be removed without substantial injury to the realty.—Dauch v. Ginsburg, 6 P.2d 952, 214 Cal. 540—Pacific Mortg. Guaranty Co. v. Rosoff, 67 P.2d 110, 20 Cal.App.2d 383—Hammel Radiator Corporation v. California Sec. thus adopting the minority rule, discussed supra subdivision a of this section, that the prior mortgage on the land takes priority over any claim by a third person under an agreement evidenced by conditional sale or otherwise. It has been held that the fact tha. the article annexed is an essentia: in dispensable part of the completed structure contemplated by the mortgage of the realty does not preclude the conditional vendor of such article from asserting a claim thereto, the court distinguishing the case of property which has become so intimately connected with or embodied in that which is subject to the mortgage that to reclaim it would more or less physically disintegrate the property held by the mortgagee.[22]

f. Article Substituted for Another

The effect of an agreement as against a prior mortgagee of land that an article annexed to the land shall remain personalty and be removable usually is not controlled by the fact that the article annexed is substituted for another chattel which was part of the realty when the mortgage was executed.

That the article annexed is substituted for another article which was part of the realty at the time of the making of the mortgage thereon has not been regarded as in itself entitling the mortgagee to priority,[23] provided the substitution does not impair the security afforded by the mortgage.[24]

g. Statutes Regulating Rights of Parties

In some jurisdictions the rights of a prior mortgagee of land and a conditional seller of chattels annexed to the land are governed by statutes.

In some jurisdictions the effect, as against a prior mortgagee of land, of an agreement between the mortgagor of the land and a third person that a chattel annexed to the land shall remain personalty is regulated by express statutory provisions,[25] the usual statutes being those which regulate the rights of a prior mortgagee of land with respect to chattels placed on the land under a conditional sales contract.[26] For instance, it is sometimes provided by statute that, as agains· a prior mortgagee of the realty, who has not assented to the reservation of title in the goods, if any of the chattels are so attached to the realty as not to be severable without material injury to the freehold, the reservation of property in the chattels so attached shall be void, notwithstanding the filing of the contract,[27] or the rights of a prior mortgagee of land and a condition-

Equitable adjustment of rights of parties

Where furnace was installed by conditional vendor on mortgaged premises, old furnace was removed without mortgagee's knowledge, and new furnace was not secured to realty and could be removed without injury thereto, vendor would be permitted to repossess new furnace on mortgagor's default, as against mortgagee, but rights of parties on account of removal of old furnace may be equitably adjusted if the facts making such course possible are pleaded and proved.—Omaha Loan & Building Ass'n v. Bigelow, 274 N.W. 574, 133 Neb. 275.

Substituted article not within mortgage

In action in replevin to recover bottle labeling machine by conditional vendor, resisted by purchaser's realty mortgagee, who foreclosed mortgage and claimed title to machine as result of such foreclosure, the contention of mortgagee that machine became subject to mortgage because it was a substitution for old machine did not support mortgagee's right to machine, where it appeared that old machine was personalty and was not within terms of mortgage.—Edward Ermold Co. v. Supp. 633.

al seller of chattels may be governed by the first clause of the Uniform Conditional Sales Act § 7, which provides that, if the goods are so affixed to realty at the time of a conditional sale or subsequently as to become a part thereof and not to be severable wholly or in any portion without material injury to the freehold, the reservation of property as to any portion not so severable shall be void after the goods are so affixed as against any person who has not expressly assented to the reservation.[28] Where such statutes exist, the rights of prior mortgagees of land and conditional sellers of personalty are controlled by the statute and not by the law of fixtures,[29] although such statutes are inapplicable where the chattel placed on the land is deemed personalty for all purposes, regardless of whether any intention to treat it as personalty is evidenced by a conditional sale agreement or otherwise.[30]

Material injury to freehold. Within statutes regulating the rights of a prior mortgagee of land and a conditional seller of chattels annexed to, or placed on, the land, various articles have been held to be removable without material injury to the freehold.[31] According to some authorities, the test of material injury to the freehold is not whether the goods are essential to the functioning of the plant or building in which they are placed but whether the attachment of the chattel to the realty is of such a character as to cause the chattel to become irrevocably a part of the land.[32]

According to other authorities, however, material injury to the freehold is not necessarily to be tested by the damage done to the buildings, but the injury to the operation of the business, plant or building is considered.[33] In the case of an industrial plant, material injury to the freehold means injury

(2) A mortgagee, agreeing that machinery about to be delivered to mortgagor as buyer under conditional sale contract was released from lien of mortgage on buyer's plant, cannot in equity and good faith deprive seller of vendor's lien on machinery by foreclosure proceedings after mortgagor's bankruptcy trustee's sale of plant and bankrupt's interest in machinery.—Smith v. to the operating plant and is not confined to the physical structure of the building alone.[34] The removal of machinery in a manufacturing plant, necessary for its operation as a complete going concern, constitutes material injury to the freehold.[35] Further, it has been held that there is material injury to the freehold by removing a refrigerator system in an apartment house,[36] or a furnace system in a dwelling house,[37] or by removing elevators installed in an apartment house[38] or in an office building.[39] On the other hand, under these authorities the removal of certain chattels has been held in particular cases not to constitute material injury to the freehold.[40]

§ 20. —— As against Person Other than Mortgagee or Purchaser of Land

a. Claimant of mechanic's lien
b. Lessor of land
c. Owner of land
d. Vendor of land; vendor's lien
e. Other persons

a. Claimant of Mechanic's Lien

A mechanic's lien claimant without notice of the existence of a conditional sale or chattel mortgage on chattels affixed to the realty has been given preference over the conditional vendor or chattel mortgagee.

One claiming a mechanic's lien on an article annexed to the realty, as constituting a part thereof, is not affected, it has been held, by the existence of a conditional sale contract or a chattel mortgage in favor of another, unless such contract or mortgage was placed on record before annexation of the article,[41] or, according to other decisions, before the doing of the work or furnishing of materials, for which the lien is claimed.[42] However, the failure to record has been regarded as immaterial provided the lien claimant knew of the vendor's claim.[43] The claimant of the lien is not a subsequent purchaser within the statute, and entitled as such to priority over a chattel mortgage, because the latter is not recorded in the real estate mortgage books.[44] The lien claimant is entitled to priority, it has also been decided, as against the claim under a chattel mortgage of which he was ignorant at the time of doing the work.[45]

Without reference to any question of notice or record, the lien claimant has been regarded as unaffected by an agreement for removal entered into between a lessor and lessee of land,[46] especially when the work for which the lien is claimed was done in the course of construction of the structure or appliance sought to be removed.[47] There is, however, authority to the effect that the fact that the article annexed was sold under a contract of conditional sale makes it personalty, so as not to be subject to a mechanic's lien.[48] The rules applicable as between vendor and purchaser, or between heir and personal representative, and not the rule applicable as between landlord and tenant, govern in determining whether articles affixed by a lessee with the lessor's consent are subject to a mechanic's lien.[49]

As between the landowner and a mechanic's lien claimant, it is immaterial that the fixture was sold to the landowner under a conditional sale contract.[50]

Statutes regulating rights of parties. In some jurisdictions statutes exist which may determine the rights of claimant of a mechanic's lien with respect to chattels annexed to, or placed on, land under an agreement, express or implied, for removal.[51]

b. Lessor of Land

An agreement that an article attached to realty shall be removable has been given effect as against the lessor of the land, although in some jurisdictions the rights of the parties are governed by statute.

As against a lessor of land, an agreement reserving the right to remove articles attached to the realty, as in the case of a conditional sale, has been held to be effective,[52] especially where the lessor has knowledge of the agreement[53] and, at least, where the article does not constitute an integral and necessary part of the realty[54] and may be removed without material damage to the premises;[55] and the fact that the lease provided that all improvements should belong to the lessor,[56] or that the landlord should have a lien for rent on all things brought on the land,[57] has been regarded as immaterial in this respect.

On the other hand, there is authority that there is no right of removal in favor of the conditional vendor of the chattel annexed, as against the lessor of the land,[58] and a conditional sale to the lessee has been regarded as inoperative as against the lessor if not recorded in a reasonable time as required by statute.[59] Further, it has been held that the agreement is inoperative as against the lessor of the land, where the article becomes an integral part of the realty and is essential to the operation of the building thereon,[60] or where its removal will cause substantial damage to the premises.[61] The view has also been asserted that, even though the article is originally removable by the vendor as against the landlord, the right of removal is lost, unless exercised during the term.[62]

Statutes regulating rights of parties. In some jurisdictions the rights of a lessor of land and a person having an agreement for the removal of chattels annexed to the land are regulated by statute; such statutes usually regulate the rights of the lessor of the land and a conditional seller of chattels placed on the land,[63] as in the case of the Uniform Conditional Sales Act § 7.[64] However, statutes providing that a conditional sale of chattels is invalid, under certain circumstances, as against third persons acquiring title to the chattels from the conditional buyer without notice of the reservation of title,[65] or as against subsequent purchasers of the realty without notice,[66] do not apply to a lessor of the land.

c. Owner of Land

An owner of land is usually protected against the claim of a conditional seller of chattels sold to a contractor and annexed to the land; in some jurisdictions, the rights of the parties are regulated by statute.

The question of the effectiveness of an agreement for removal as against the landowner, when he is not a party thereto, has arisen not infrequently in the case of an article sold to a contractor by conditional sale, and annexed by him to the land on which his contract is being performed, and it has usually been decided that the landowner is protected as against the claim of the vendor of the chattel,[67] especially when he made payments to the contractor in ignorance of the conditional character of the sale.[68] Apart from the making of payments by the landowner to the contractor, the fact that the former knew of the conditional character of the sale of the article has been referred to as giving priority to the vendor of the chattel;[69] and such a view is involved in decisions adverse to the right of the vendor in so far as based on the landowner's ignorance of the character of the sale.[70] On the other hand it has been asserted that the mere fact of notice to the owner of land that the contractor is intending to attach to the land personalty which is subject to a mortgage or condition that it shall be only such rights as they as tenants had, namely, right to remove during term, and that therefore right of removal was lost, because no demand was made during existence of term.—J. H. Gerlach Co. v. Noyes, 147 N.E. 24, 251 Mass. 558, 45 A.L.R. 961.

(2) If a ventilator sold under a conditional sales contract to a tenant is to be treated as a trade fixture, it becomes a part of the freehold if it is not removed on the expiration of the term.—Natural Autoforce Ventilator Co. v. Winslow, 102 N.E. 705, 215 Mass. 478.

63. Articles included in statute
St.1912 c 271, Gen.L. c 184 § 13, providing that no conditional sale of heating apparatus, plumbing goods, gas ranges, or other articles of personal property which are afterward wrought into, or attached to, real estate, shall be valid as against purchasers or grantees, unless notice thereof is recorded, applies only to the articles mentioned and personal property of a like kind, and does not include bowling alleys.—J. H. Gerlach Co. v. Noyes, 134 N.E. 612, 241 Mass. 69.

N.Y.—Le Vine v. Rosenthal, 298 N.Y.S. 887, 252 App.Div. 808.

Effect of recording lease
Prior recordation of lease prohibiting removal of equipment on surrender of building to lessor does not affect relationship, under Uniform Conditional Sales Act, of lessee and seller of sprinkling system, especially since lease anticipated only fixtures belonging to lessee and lessor had not parted with anything nor changed position because of installation of system.—Independent Ætna Sprinkler Corporation v. Morris, 175 A. 102, 114 N.J.Law 23.

Material injury to freehold
(1) Where equipment essential to the operation of a motion picture projecting machine covered by conditional sales agreement could be removed without damage to the realty, but without substitution of like parts the theater where the machine was located would be unable to show moving pictures, reservation of title to the equipment in the conditional seller was valid as against the owner and lessee of the theater not consenting to the reservation, the "institution doctrine" being inapplicable.—Amusement Supply Co. v. Kaybe Amusement Co., 24 A.2d 570, 128 N.J.Law 98.

(2) Owner and lessor of building are entitled to restrain conditional seller from removing tanks and pipes buried underground.—Lifschitz v. Vorclone Corporation, 148. A. 899, 8 N.J.Misc. 83.

(3) Machinery attached to floor with screws and with removable connections to steam pipes was removable without material injury to freehold.—Lifschitz v. Vorclone Corporation, supra.

taken and removed for nonpayment of the price cannot bind such owner in the absence of his consent thereto.[71] Occasionally, the fact that the vendor of the article knew that it was to be annexed to land not belonging to his purchaser has been referred to as an additional ground for according preference to the owner of the land.[72]

An agreement by one having an easement in the land for the removal of an article annexed in the exercise of the easement, will, it seems, bind the owner of the land.[73]

Statutes regulating rights of parties. In some jurisdictions the effect, as against the owner of land, of an agreement that chattels annexed to the realty may be removed is controlled by statutory provisions,[74] the usual provision being one which regulates the rights of the owner of the land with respect to chattels placed on the land by a conditional vendor,[75] as, for instance, the provision of the Uniform Conditional Sales Act § 7 that, as against the owner of realty, the reservation of the property in goods by a conditional seller shall be void when such goods are to be so affixed to the realty as to become part thereof, but to be severable without material injury to the freehold, unless the conditional sale contract, or a copy thereof, together with a statement signed by the seller, briefly describing the realty and stating that the goods are to be affixed thereto, shall be filed, before they are so affixed, in the office where a deed would be recorded or registered to affect such realty.[76] Such statutes, rather than the law of fixtures, control in determining the rights of an owner of realty and a conditional seller of chattels placed thereon.[77]

According to some authorities, material injury to the freehold, within statutes regulating the rights of an owner of realty and a conditional seller of chattels placed thereon is not to be tested necessarily by the physical injury done to the premises, but the injury to the operation of the business, plant, or building is to be considered,[78] and the proper test, according to other authorities, is whether the Purpose of statute is to protect conditional seller and owner of realty in their property rights, where there is uncertainty as to whether property is realty or personalty.—Paragon Plumbing Supply Corporation v. Umansky Plumbing & Heating Co., 9 N.Y.S.2d 639, 170 Misc. 428.

Knowledge and assent as substitute for recording

Statute requires notice to owner only as substitute for actual knowledge, and knowledge and assent of owner to conditional sales agreement between conditional seller and contractor would put owner on notice as to his rights in property to be affixed to realty.—Paragon Plumbing Supply Corporation v. Umansky Plumbing & Heating Co., supra.

Statute should be confined in its application to situations where the need of protection of the owner of the realty is clear.—Dryja v. chattel is attached to the realty in such manner as to cause it to become irrevocably a part of the realty, and not whether the article is necessary to the functioning of the building or plant to which it is annexed.[79]

d. Vendor of Land; Vendor's Lien

An agreement with a purchaser of land in possession for the removal of articles placed on the land during such possession ordinarily is effective as against the vendor of the land.

An agreement with a purchaser of land in possession thereof for the removal of articles or structures placed on the land during such possession, as in the case of a conditional sale, has ordinarily been given effect as against the vendor of the land, claiming them on the purchaser's default,[80] provided, at least, the removal will not involve a substantial injury to the realty,[81] and provided the vendor of the land has not made any advances or lost any rights by reason of the annexation of the articles in question.[82] That the contract for the sale of the land expressly provided that articles annexed to the land should become a part thereof has been decided to be immaterial in this connection.[83] The fact that the article annexed is essential to the use of the building does not give the vendor of the land the right to appropriate it where it may be removed without material injury to the freehold.[84] The fact that a chattel mortgage on articles annexed by the purchaser of land was given before he exercised his option to purchase the land has been regarded as making the mortgage effective as against the vendor of the land who subsequently enforced a forfeiture, the articles so annexed being regarded by the court as personalty until the exercise of the option, by reason of the lack of any presumption of intention at that time to make a permanent annexation.[85]

On the other hand, the right of removal as against the vendor of the land has been denied.[86] It has been held that the agreement is inoperative against the vendor of the land where he makes advances on the faith of the article annexed,[87] or where the article has become an integral part of the realty.[88] Further, the right of removal as against the vendor of the land has been regarded as existing only in so far as his consent thereto can be inferred from his knowledge of the agreement at the time of annexation and his failure to object thereto.[89] The right of removal has been held not to exist when the vendor of the land had undertaken to erect a building in consideration of the purchaser's agreement to furnish the article in question, which was to be considered a part of the realty, and the vendor was ignorant of the agreement with the vendor of the article for its removal in case of nonpayment of the price.[90]

97. Uniform Conditional Sales Act
(1) One having judgment lien against realty of conditional vendee may be one against whom reservation of property in goods affixed to realty in sales contract would be void, under the first clause of the Uniform Conditional Sales Act § 7.—Power Mfg. Co. v. Bailey, Del., 131 A. 696, 3 W.W.Harr, 129.

(2) Judgment creditor is not "subsequent purchaser," within the second clause of the Uniform Conditional Sales Act § 7, providing that, if goods are affixed to realty at time of conditional sale or subsequently so as to become part thereof but to be severable without material injury to freehold, reservation of property shall be void as against "subsequent purchasers" of realty for value and without notice.—People's Savings & Trust Co. v. § 21. Severance

a. In general
b. Tortious severance
c. Severance by act of God
d. Temporary severance
e. Constructive severance
f. As against third persons

a. In General

Fixtures may become personalty again by a severance, which must ordinarily be made by the owner of the realty. An unexecuted intent to sever is ineffective.

Articles which have become part of the realty by annexation can become personalty again by severance from the realty;[2] but a mere intention to sever, without any positive action to carry out the intention, is ineffective.[3] A severance, to be valid and effective, must, generally speaking, be by the owner of the land, since he is the only person who has any right of control over the articles annexed thereto,[4] although, as shown supra §§ 12, 13, there may be a right of removal in a person other than such owner, by reason of an agreement, express or implied, to that effect, or owing to other considerations connected with the circumstances under which the annexation was made, as discussed infra § 25.

b. Tortious Severance

On a wrongful severance the owner of the realty may treat the articles severed as personalty and recover them as such.

If the severance is by a person who has no right to make it, the article severed continues to belong to the previous owner, and he may adopt such unauthorized act and treat the article as personalty,[5] as by bringing trover, replevin, or a similar action under principles discussed infra §§ 59–67. The owner's rights in this regard accrue immediately,[6] even though the wrongful severance is by a tenant, whose term has yet some time to run,[7] and even though the severance was made by the tenant in order to preserve the article from destruction by fire.[8]

Successive estates. Where there are several estates in the land, he who has the first estate of inheritance, it is said, becomes the general owner of the chattel wrongfully severed, and if he is a tenant for life without impeachment of waste, and the property is such as he might lawfully have severed from the realty, he becomes the general owner, and

c. Severance by Act of God

The authorities conflict as to whether a physical severance by storm or other act of God effects a legal severance, but agree that if articles so severed are thereafter treated by the owner as personalty they should be regarded as severed in contemplation of law.

It has been decided in some cases that the severance may be by act of God, such as flood, fire, or storm;[10] but a contrary view has also been asserted, on the theory that the assent of the owner is necessary in order to change the character of property.[11] If articles so severed are thereafter treated by the owner as personalty, they are presumably legally such in any jurisdiction.[12]

d. Temporary Severance

Temporary detachment of fixtures without intent to make them personalty ordinarily does not effect a severance, but there is contrary authority.

The severance must be with the intention that the articles shall become personalty and not be for merely temporary purposes.[13] Fencing material placed on the ground along the line of a contemplated fence, or, temporarily detached from an existing fence, has been held to be a part of the freehold,[14] but there is authority to the contrary.[15]

e. Constructive Severance

(1) In general
(2) Exception in deed
(3) Separate sale or mortgage

(1) In General

Fixtures remaining attached to the realty may be constructively severed by act or agreement of the parties clearly evincing such intent.

Even though there is no physical detachment of articles or structures affixed to realty, there may be a constructive severance by act or agreement of the parties.[16] A constructive severance may be made by express agreement,[17] and a severance may, it seems, be brought about by the treatment of articles annexed as personalty by the persons interested therein,[18] but acts or agreements failing to show mutual intent to treat the fixture as personalty will not effectuate a constructive severance.[19]

The doctrine of constructive severance is inap-

Separate insurance of fixture

Separate insurance of bowling alleys by purchaser of premises and vendor's acceptance of small down plicable to chattels which have never been so attached to the realty as to become fixtures.[20]

A mere oral recognition by the landowner of another as owner of an article previously annexed has been regarded as effectuating a severance, giving the article the character of personalty,[21] sometimes on the theory that this is equivalent to a previous permission to make the annexation.[22] In other cases it has been denied that an oral agreement or understanding, after annexation, can operate in this regard as does an agreement prior to annexation,[23] it being recognized, however, that the existence of an agreement made prior to annexation may be inferred from the subsequent recognition or admission of rights thereunder.[24]

(2) Exception in Deed

A constructive severance of fixtures may be effected by an exception inserted in a deed to realty.

A severance, making the article personalty, has been regarded as effected by the exception or reservation, in a conveyance of land, of articles which would otherwise pass as part of the realty.[25]

(3) Separate Sale or Mortgage

While there is contrary authority, a separate sale or mortgage of articles or structures affixed to realty will, it is more generally held, effect a severance in contemplation of law, even though there be no actual, physical severance thereof.

By the weight of authority, a separate sale or mortgage of articles previously annexed to the land has the effect of rendering them personalty, although in no way physically severed;[26] but there is authority to the effect that no legal severance and change of the fixture from realty into personalty occurs until there has been an actual severance.[27] In any event, a sale or mortgage operates as a license actually to sever and to remove the article,[28] within the time limited, where time is payment made by prospective buyer of alleys from purchaser was held not severance of alleys from land so as to bar vendor's lien thereon as against chattel mortgagee's lien on alleys.—David G. Janes Co. v. Weed, supra.

Contingent on removal

(1) Vendor's reservation in contract of sale, of right to remove fixtures by named date was contingent on physical detachment and removal before the named day, failing which, they would retain their nature as realty and pass to vendee.—Maryland Wrecking & Equipment Co. v. News Pub. Co., 129 A. 836, 148 Md. 560—Western Maryland Dairy v. Maryland Wrecking & Equipment Co., 126 A. 135, 146 Md. 318.

(2) Reservation in sale contract by vendor of right to remove boxwood plants did not prevent absolute deed to land from passing title to plants, so as to render plants repleviable from purchaser.—Montgomery v. McKeever, 171 A. 853, 166 Md. 586.

(3) Under vendor's reservation of right to remove fixtures by a named date, the fixtures became personalty only when actually severed and removed, but as between the vendor and purchaser of the fixtures they were potential personal property, and their sale one of goods and chattels.—Western Maryland Dairy v. Maryland Wrecking & Equipment Co., supra.

Unconsummated arrangement

That vendor having lien on property might consent to severance on payment of value of severed property does not bar his right against entire property as it existed prior to discussion of proposed arrangement where such arrangement was never consummated.—David G. made of the essence.[29]

Formal conveyance as essential to constructive severance. The view has been asserted that, in order to effect a severance, the conveyance or mortgage must be so executed as to comply with the statutory requirements as to the conveyance of land.[30]

f. As against Third Persons

(1) Prior lienor
(2) Subsequent purchaser or other subsequent claimant
(3) Grantor enforcing forfeiture

(1) Prior Lienor

While there is contrary authority, the generally accepted view is that a constructive severance, such as a separate mortgage or sale of fixtures, cannot affect adversely the security of a prior mortgage covering land and fixtures thereon, and that not even an actual severance will destroy a prior mortgage or other lien.

While there is some authority to the contrary,[31] the cases are generally in agreement that, after executing a mortgage on land which covers articles annexed thereto as part thereof, one cannot affect the security of the mortgage by a merely constructive severance, as for instance by a separate mortgage or sale of the articles annexed.[32] Even in the case of an actual severance, the mortgagee has been regarded as retaining his lien on the article severed,[33] and, where a mortgagor, without the knowledge or consent of the mortgagee, removes a building from the premises, leaving the land inadequate as security for the mortgage debt, the lien of the mortgagee on such building is not impaired or lost[34] as against anyone having notice;[35] but there is authority to the contrary,[36] at least, where the removed building has become part of another freehold;[37] and it was held that, when a building had been taken apart and the materials used by the mortgagor in erecting a structure on other land, the mortgagee, although having the legal title to the land, lost all right as regards such materials.[38]

As against a prior lienor other than a mortgagee, even an actual physical severance by the owner has been regarded as ineffectual to divest the lien,[39] although there are decisions to the contrary.[40]

(2) Subsequent Purchaser or Other Subsequent Claimant

A subsequent purchaser of land, or other subsequent claimant, may be protected as against a constructive severance of fixtures even, according to some cases, when he has notice; but he is not protected as against an actual, physical severance.

An actual severance is effective as against a subsequent purchaser of the land.[41] But a mere constructive severance is not effective as against a subsequent purchaser or person standing in the position of a purchaser, who is without notice of the severance.[42] An attaching creditor has been regarded as entitled to protection within such a rule,[43] but not a purchaser at execution sale[44] or an assignee in bankruptcy.[45] According to some authorities a constructive severance is not effective as against a subsequent purchaser, or claimant, even though he has notice thereof,[46] while by others he is not protected if he takes with notice.[47]

A subsequent purchaser of the land is, it has been decided, not charged with notice of a prior mortgage on the fixture by the fact that it is recorded among the chattel mortgage records.[48]

(3) Grantor Enforcing Forfeiture

The grantee's severance of a fixture may be effective as against his grantor's assertion of a forfeiture for breach of condition subsequent.

The severance of an article by the grantee of land has apparently been regarded as effective as against a grantor of the land asserting a forfeiture for breach of condition subsequent.[49]

§ 22. Removal

The right to remove fixtures may spring from act or agreement of the parties and should be exercised within a reasonable time. Resultant injury to the fixture has been held not to preclude exercise of the right of removal, and injury to the freehold must be substantial to have such effect.

The right of removal of fixtures may arise from the express or implied agreement of the parties, under principles discussed supra §§ 12–20; but in the absence of mutual agreement, the disclosed intent of the annexor is ordinarily deemed of controlling importance.[50] Ordinarily, it is a characteristic of a "fixture" that under some circumstances it may be removed.[51]

Time of removal. One having the right of removal of a fixture has a reasonable time from its accrual within which to exercise such right.[52] A reasonable delay in exercising the reserved right to remove fixtures does not show an abandonment of such right,[53] but an unreasonable delay in exercising the right may result in its loss.[54]

Injury occasioned by removal. To preclude exercise of the right of removal on the ground of injury to the freehold, it must appear that removal would occasion an injury of a substantial and material character.[55] In a proper case one having the right of removal may be compelled to indemnify the owner of the realty for damage resulting from its exercise.[56] The fact that removal of a fixture may cause injury to the article or structure, although not injuring the realty, will not destroy the right of removal.[57]

Statutory provisions. Statutes authorizing removal of improvements to which a lienholder has contributed, if removal can be accomplished without material injury to the buildings, have been construed as limited in their application to buildings already on the land and to which the improvements are attached, and such statutes do not preclude the removal of improvements consisting of new buildings placed on the land and unattached to previously existing structures, even though injury may result to such new buildings.[58]

§ 23. Person Making Annexation in General

The relationship of the parties to each other and to the property involved is important in the determination of whether or not a chattel annexed to realty has become a fixture.

The relationship of the parties to the controversy may be determinative as to whether an article annexed is a fixture,[59] as may also the relation of the person making the annexation to the property on which the annexation is made;[60] and where the person making the annexation is also the owner of the realty it tends strongly to show that a permanent accession to the realty was intended.[61] For the making of a mortgage on realty and annexed articles or structures to have any influence as a factor in determining the real or personal character of the fixtures, it must appear that the mortgage was made by the owner or by one having an interest in the property concerned.[62]

§ 24. —— Person Not Owning Chattel Annexed

As a general rule, personalty should be attached to realty by the owner of such personalty, or with his real or presumed consent, in order that it may become an irremovable fixture.

Ordinarily an article or structure must be annexed by its owner or with his consent in order to become a part of the realty, and where the annexation is by another than the chattel owner and without the latter's consent, the chattel remains personalty in the eyes of the law.[63] The right of the legal owner of the chattel to claim it has been recognized even as against a bona fide purchaser for value of the land to which it has been annexed, the defense of bona fide purchase being available only as against the holder of an equity.[64] However, a contrary view has also been asserted, that even when an article is wrongfully and without the owner's consent annexed to another's land, it becomes a part of such land, so as to be irremovable by the former owner of the article,[65] provided at least the character of the article and mode of annexation were such that the identity of the article was lost.[66]

61. N.Y.—Marine Midland Trust Co. of Binghamton v. Ahern, supra.

Intent to make permanent improvement
If the proprietor of the land himself annexes the chattels, a doubt as to his intention to annex them permanently will in most cases be resolved in favor of such intent, on the theory that his design is to place permanent improvements on his property, which will enhance the usefulness of the property and consequently its market value.—Danville Holding Corporation v. Clement, 16 S.E.2d 345, 178 Va. 223.

Refrigeration machine
In determining whether refrigeration machine attached to realty was intended to be a permanent accession to the realty so as to be a "fixture," considerable weight should be given to fact that machine was purchased and annexed by owner of realty since owner is more likely to intend permanency than one in possession of premises temporarily, as a tenant.—Marine Midland Trust Co. of Binghamton v. Annexation by bailee
Where plaintiff by written agreement leased a tank to be used on the land of lessee, the transaction was a bailment, and setting it in the ground and covering it with earth, as between plaintiff and the lessee, did not cause it to become real estate.—Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Dolgin, 115 A. 235, 95 Vt. 414, 17 A.L.R. 1218.

Annexation by purchaser
Where bottle labeling machine was sold under conditional sales contract and machine was set up by vendor on floor plates and the four legs of the heavy section of the machine was set on cement blocks laid on floor, it was conclusively shown that parties intended that machine should remain a chattel until fully paid for, and the fact that purchaser altered manner of affixation by setting the legs in cement blocks and screwing legs of conveyor to floor to eliminate vibration did not cause machine to become a "fixture."—Edward Ermold Co. v. Chemical Bank & Trust Co., 14 N.Y.S.2d 424.

§ 25. —— Person Having No Estate in Land

a. In general
b. Effect of mistake
c. Erections on public land
d. Annexation by public or by quasi-public corporations

a. In General

The general rule, subject to certain exceptions and qualifications, is that personalty affixed by one to the land of another becomes part of the freehold and passes to the owner of the land.

Where the matter is not otherwise arranged by agreement between the landowner and the chattel owner, as discussed supra § 13, at common law and under statutes declaratory thereof, personalty affixed by one to the land of another ordinarily becomes a part of the freehold and title passes to the fee owner.[67] Contrary dicta are, however, to be

Annexation by bailee to his land of personal property bailed, with or without knowledge and consent of bailor, does not make it realty, and bailor can recover it from bailee's grantee, even though he is an innocent purchaser, unless the annexation was of such a character that the identity of the chattel is lost, and it cannot be removed without substantial injury to itself or the real estate.—Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Dolgin, supra—26 C.J. p 681 note 70 [c].

Decision as to loss of identity

The intention of bailee attaching personal property to land, and the damage involved in its removal have a controlling influence in deciding whether the identity of the personalty is lost so as to make it realty.—Standard Oil Co. of New York v. Dolgin, supra.

Right of personal property in building can exist only when it is erected on the land of another with the latter's consent and express or implied agreement that the builder may remove it.—Meeker v. Oszust, 30 N.E.2d 246, 307 Mass. 366—Murphy v. Marland, 8 Cush., Mass., 578.

Articles affixed by trespasser

(1) An electric fan and motor, the rails and spikes from a tram track, and the copper trolley wire placed on premises by trespasser, who used the premises for coal mine, are fixtures which belong to the owner of the premises.—Titus v. Poland Coal Co., 119 A. 540, 275 Pa. 431.

(2) Where an owner of coal in adjoining premises, intending to condemn a right to do so under a statute later declared unconstitutional, entered on the premises in controversy, erected buildings and other structures thereon necessary for the operation of the mine, and made five openings in the premises, it constituted a coal mining operation as regarded question of trade fixtures on ejectment, which fixtures became a part of the realty because such mine owner was a mere trespasser and not a tenant nor licensee.—Titus v. Poland Coal Co., supra.

In Louisiana

(1) "In order for an object or thing which, from its nature, is movable, to be immobilized by destination on being attached to an immovable, it is essential that the ownership of the movable and immovable must be in the same person."—Buckley v. Lindsey Mercantile Co., 5 La.App. 467, 469—26 C.J. p 676 note 16 [a].

(2) Under Rev.Civ.Code art 468, things become immobilized by destination only when placed on a tract of land for its service and improvement by the owner himself, or when he, the owner, has attached them permanently to the tenement or to the building.—Richardson v. Item Co., 134 So. 380, 172 La. 421—Folse v. Loreauville Sugar Factory, App., 156 So. 667, followed in Builders' Supply Co. v. Loreauville Sugar Factory, 156 So. 672.

(3) Under statutory provisions to the effect that, where a third person with his own materials constructs improvements or fixtures on the land of another, the owner of the soil may, at his option, compel such third person to remove or demolish the same, or, on the other hand, may retain the same on reimbursing the builder for labor and materials, the fact that title to land is in one person and that a house is built thereon by another person does not prevent the house from continuing to remain the property of its builder. —Davis-Wood Lumber Co. v. Insurance Co. of North America, App., 154 So. 760, followed in Davis-Wood Lumber Co. v. Colonial Fire Underwriters of Hartford, Conn., 154 So. 767 and Davis-Wood Lumber Co. v. Security Ins. Co. of New Haven, Conn., 154 So. 767.

(4) In this connection it has been said that the works built by one on the land of another remain the property of the builder until the owner of the soil has made his election under the statute.—Baldwin v. Union Insurance Co., 2 Rob. 133.

(5) It has also been held that the owner of the soil has the right, under such code provisions, to prevent the purchaser at a sheriff's sale of the property of the builder from removing a house constructed on the soil owner's land by a third person. —Poche v. Theriot, 23 La.Ann. 137.

(6) Where defendant, while in good-faith possession of plaintiff's land, buried a carbide tank in ground for supplying residence with lighting, and tank could be removed without injuring land or building, defend-found,[68] and occasional decisions,[69] more particularly in connection with annexations or erections made in good faith and under mistake as discussed in the following subdivision of this section; and there is authority, as shown infra § 28, to the effect that unity of ownership in land and chattel is essential to render the latter a part of the former when affixed to the land in a mode permitting severance without injury.

b. Effect of Mistake

It is generally held that, even where personalty is affixed to the land of another through mistake, the owner of the personalty has no right to remove it, but there are authorities to the contrary. Where the mistake is mutual, consent of the realty owner may be implied so as to afford a right of removal.

That one in attaching an article to, or erecting a structure on, another's land, acts in good faith under a mistake as to the title to the land or his rights therein, has been held to give him no right to remove the article or structure.[70] In some states, however, a contrary view has been adopted and it is held that one's mistake as to the ownership of the land entitles him to remove the article or structure,[71] provided such removal does not cause damage to the property of the landowner.[72] If the mistake is mutual, being participated in by the owner of the land, so that he in effect consents to the annexation to his land, the article or structure may be regarded as removable,[73] in accordance with the ordinary presumption of an agreement for removal in the case of an annexation under license, discussed supra § 14.

c. Erections on Public Land

Personalty affixed to public lands by a stranger to the title ordinarily becomes a part of such land and passes to the landowner; but where the personalty is affixed under a contract subsequently broken by the public, the original owner of the personalty may be accorded a right of removal. One lacking title to the interest in public land to which personalty is affixed may not claim the same as his realty.

The rule that an article annexed to land by a stranger to the title becomes a part of the land and so the property of the landowner has been applied to structures placed on lands of the United States by one having no rights therein, these being held to pass as part of the realty to one subsequently entering or purchasing the land;[74] but a contrary view has also been asserted.[75] The rule that the fixture becomes part of the realty likewise applies, it seems, to erections on, or attachments to, land of a municipality.[76] However, when articles or materials are furnished to a municipality under contract, and the municipality refuses to pay therefor, because of the invalidity of the contract, or noncompliance with the terms thereof by the contractor, or for other reasons, the contractor may recover the articles or materials, even though annexed to municipal land or to the bed of a street or highway, if their removal will not involve material damage to the municipality or to property owners,[77] this apparently involving an application of the ordinary doctrine, discussed supra § 14, that an agreement for removal may be inferred when an article is annexed under license from the owner of the land.

case of structures erected by the United States on the lands of private owners. The right of removal by railroads or other public corporations which have made annexations on private lands has been both upheld and denied under the circumstances of particular cases.

In some cases the view has been asserted that, in the absence of an express agreement for removal, or of circumstances calling for the implication of such an agreement, as considered supra § 14, articles annexed to private land by a railroad corporation or other public company, without any permission, express or implied, are not removable by it as against the landowner.[78] However, where a railroad company made annexations to private land, in the belief that this was its own land, it was allowed to remove the appliances on discovering its mistake;[79] and a right of removal has been recognized even in the absence of mistake.[80] It has also been decided that tracks wrongfully laid on another's land by a railroad company do not become part of the realty so as to pass by a tax sale of the land.[81]

The rule that annexations by a railroad under express permission or by force of a grant to it of the right of way retain their personal character, discussed supra § 14, does not apply where the dominent estate in the land and in the improvements is vested in the same owner.[82]

Articles attached to the bed of a street by a public service corporation, for the purpose of conducting its business, have been regarded as retaining the character of personalty where the right so to utilize the street was subject to revocation by the municipal authorities,[83] while a different view has been adopted as regards articles which the municipality could not at any time require to be removed.[84] However, even apart from any power in the municipality to require their removal, it has been held that rails laid in a street by a street railway company, under a valid grant of the right, are to be regarded as retaining the character of personalty, since the company has no legal interest in the street, or right of exclusive control thereover, as has a steam railroad company in the land covered by its right of way.[85]

Structures erected by the United States, in time of war, for military and hospital purposes, without the consent of the owners of the land, were held not to belong to the latter, it being said, as grounds for the decision, that there was no intent to improve the ground, or to make it accessory to some business or employment, no assertion of title in the soil, or of an intention to hold an adverse possession, and no resemblance to the case of a tort-feasor who annexes his structures to the freehold and is, therefore, presumed to intend to convert the chattel into realty.[86]

§ 26. —— Person Having Fee Simple Estate in Land

Where an article is annexed by the owner to land in which he has a fee simple estate or in which he thereafter acquires such an estate, it is ordinarily regarded as becoming a part thereof, although the relationship between the owner and the party claiming the property may lead to the application of a different rule.

Ordinarily, the owner of a fee simple to land, or one who becomes such owner after owning a less interest, by his annexation of personal property, renders it an accession to the land,[87] although whether or not the personalty affixed will be regarded as an accession to the land or as still retaining its character as personalty depends, to some extent, on the relationship subsisting between the fee simple owner of the land and the adverse claimant, under principles discussed in respect of a grantee or mortgagee of the land infra §§ 43–51, in respect of the holder of a vendor's lien supra § 21,

§ 27. —— Person Having Limited Estate in Land

The same article or structure cannot be at the same time a fixture and realty as to one undivided interest in land and personalty as to another undivided interest in the same land.

A thing cannot be a fixture and realty as to one undivided interest in land and remain personalty as to another undivided interest.[88] In the case of an article annexed by one having a life estate in land, the question whether it is to be regarded as a part of the land ordinarily arises as between such life tenant, or one claiming in his right, on the one side, and the remainderman, on the other side, as discussed infra § 31. In the case of an annexation by one holding as tenant under a lease, the question as to the effect thereof ordinarily arises as between the tenant, or his successor in interest, and the landlord, having the reversion, although occasionally the question arises as between the tenant and one to whom he has undertaken to transfer the article, or his entire interest in the land, and such matters are considered infra §§ 33–42.

§ 28. —— Persons Having Different Interests in Land and Chattel

Where an article owned by one person is affixed to land owned by another and is capable of severance without injury to the owner of the land, there is some authority to the effect that it cannot become a part of the land.

The view has occasionally been expressed that, in order that an article annexed may become a part of the realty, the same person must own both the article and the land to which the article is annexed and must, moreover, own the same interest in each,[89] this view having been applied when the undivided interest in the chattel of the one making the annexation was not of the same extent as his undivided interest in the land,[90] and when the sole owner of the article annexed owned merely an undivided interest in the land.[91]

Annexation by firm. The requirement of identity of interest in the chattel and in the land has been applied in the case of a chattel annexed by a partnership to land belonging to one member thereof, with the result of regarding it as still retaining its chattel character,[92] but more usually an article so annexed by a partnership to land belonging to one of the partners has been regarded as a part of the realty.[93]

§ 29. Between Persons in Family Relation and Their Privies

It has been held that ordinarily articles or structures of a permanent character, affixed by a husband to his wife's realty, become a part of the realty without right of removal, but that, where the husband is a tenant by the curtesy following his wife's decease, the ordinary rule does not apply. An analogous rule has been applied to a surviving wife.

Articles or structures placed by a husband on his wife's property, if of a permanent nature, have been held to belong to the freehold, with no right of removal in him or his representatives;[94] and the fact that the wife consented to the annexations was regarded as immaterial, she having no power to contract with her husband.[95] That the fixtures were annexed by the husband for purposes of trade has also been regarded as immaterial in this connection.[96] In case, however, the husband survives the wife, and becomes a tenant by the curtesy, and as such annexes articles for purposes of trade, he has, it has been decided, the right of removal;[97] and a right of removal has been accorded a widow remaining in possession of her deceased husband's land pending settlement of his estate.[98]

§ 30. Between Personal Representative and Heir of Decedent, Devisees, and Their Privies

a. Heir and personal representative
b. Devisee and legatee or personal representative

a. Heir and Personal Representative

The rule that personalty affixed to the realty becomes a part thereof is strictly applied in favor of the heir of a decedent as against the latter's personal representative, although where the article or structure is readily removable without injury to the real estate it may be held personalty passing to the representative.

The rule that what has been annexed to the freehold becomes part thereof is stated to apply with full force in favor of an heir as against a personal representative of the landowner;[99] but where the article or structure is so affixed that it is readily removable, it has been held personalty passing to decedent's representative and not to his heir.[1]

Domestic and ornamental fixtures. While there are early decisions to the effect that articles annexed to the freehold for purposes of ornament or domestic convenience pass to the executor rather than to the heir, no such exception to the general rule is recognized in the later cases, such articles being assumed to pass to the heir if so annexed as to be part of the realty.[2]

Trade fixtures. Articles evidently annexed for trade purposes have been regarded as fixtures passing to the heir,[3] but there is authority to the contrary.[4]

Particular articles or structures. In application of the above rules, various particular articles or structures have been held fixtures passing to the heir,[5] or personalty passing to the representative,[6] under the circumstances disclosed in the particular case.

b. Devisee and Legatee or Personal Representative

In the absence of a contrary intent revealed by the will, the devisee of real estate is entitled to articles or structures affixed thereto, as against the claims of those entitled to the personal estate.

The right of the devisee of land to the articles annexed thereto is said to be determined by the same considerations as arise on a claim by the heir.[7] Unless the will evidences a contrary intent, articles or structures affixed to the land pass to the devisee of the realty to which they are attached rather than to a legatee or personal representative.[8] However, a thing not physically affixed to the realty devised will be deemed personalty and will not pass to the devisee,[9] since, as shown in the C.J.S. title Wills § 786, also 69 C.J. p 404 notes 44–46, a devise of realty does not ordinarily include personalty.

§ 31. Between Life Tenant and Remainderman and Their Privies

As between the life tenant and remainderman, the law allows the greatest latitude and indulgence in favor of the presumption that particular articles are to be considered as personal chattels.

freehold may be removed by him,[10] but improvements which are intended to, and do, become a part of the realty may not be removed by the life tenant or those claiming under him.[11] It has been said that as between the life tenant and remainderman the law allows the greatest latitude and indulgence in favor of the presumption that particular articles are to be considered as personal chattels, rather than as part of the freehold.[12] As between a tenant of land for life, or his representative, and the remainderman or reversioner, the rule forbidding removal is, it is said, applied with less strictness than between executor and heir and with more strictness than between landlord and tenant.[13]

A lessee from the tenant for life has no greater rights than the tenant for life himself.[14] The lessee's rights cannot be increased by an agreement with the tenant for life, not assented to by the remainderman, giving the lessee the right of removal.[15] The acceptance of rent from the lessee by the remainderman will not be deemed a ratification of such agreement where it is collateral to the lease, and it does not appear that the remainderman was apprised of it.[16] The fact that the remainderman did not give notice of his rights to one deriving title from the life tenant does not create an estoppel against him to claim improvements.[17] On the other hand, an agreement between the lessee from the life tenant and the life tenant, that buildings erected by the lessee shall belong to him and shall be removable by him, has been held to make them personalty, even after the transfer of such buildings by the lessee to the life tenant.[18]

Trade fixtures. The tenant for life, or his personal representative, has ordinarily been permitted to remove articles annexed by him for purposes of trade.[19]

Agricultural fixtures. Agricultural fixtures have been regarded as not removable by the life tenant or his representative.[20] Fixtures used for mixed purposes of trade and agriculture belong to the tenant.[21] On the other hand, agricultural implements which are easily removable, and which are considered as personalty, belong to the life tenant and are not part of the realty.[22]

Domestic and ornamental fixtures. It is public policy to permit a tenant for life to make the most profitable and comfortable use of the premises that can be obtained consistently with the rights of the owner of the freehold, and the law allows the greatest indulgence in favor of the presumption that domestic and ornamental fixtures are to be considered as personal chattels.[23] Under this rule, a lighting plant, installed by the life tenant, has been held to be a personal chattel, rather than part of the freehold.[24]

§ 32. Between Tenants in Common and Their Privies

A tenant in common who annexes articles or structures to land owned by him in common with another has no right to remove such articles if they have been so annexed as to become part of the realty.

One who annexes articles or structures to land owned by him and another in common has no right to remove such articles.[25] In determining whether articles are so annexed to the land as to be part of the realty as between tenants in common, the principles which control as between grantor and grantee are to be applied.[26] Consent of his coöwners obtained by a tenant in common before erecting a building on the land held in common does not entitle him to treat the building as belonging exclusively to him;[27] but there are cases apparently to the contrary.[28]

§ 33. Between Landlord and Tenant and Their Privies

As between landlord and tenant, improvements of a permanent nature placed on the leased premises by the tenant with the intention that they should be permanently annexed are not removable by the tenant and his privies.

Piping, rods, and tubes in oil well are presumptively a part of the realty, and this presumption can be rebutted only on a showing that lessee under his contract had the right of removal.—Terry v. Crosswy, Tex. Civ.App., 264 S.W. 718.

Sprinkler system

(1) Parts of a concealed sprinkler system built into a building on leased premises became part of the freehold where it could not be removed without causing substantial damage.

Mo.—Globe Automatic Sprinkler Co. v. Boester, 95 S.W.2d 825, 231 Mo. App. 203.

(2) It has also been held that a sprinkler system becomes a fixture and an inseparable part of the leased premises.—People v. Leo, 183 N.Y.S. 597, 112 Misc. 578.

(3) Tanks or minor parts, such as nozzles, which can be removed with no appreciable damage, do not become part of the freehold.—Interstate Trust & Banking Co. v. Warren, supra.

(4) On the other hand, where the sprinkler system may be removed without material damage to the building, it may be removed by the lessee installing it.
Ark.—Romich v. Kempner Bros. Realty Co., 92 S.W.2d 215, 192 Ark. 454.
La.—Richardson v. Item Co., 134 So. 380, 172 La. 421.

(5) The fact that some expense may be incurred in adopting the sprinkler system to, and installing it in, another building is not of controlling importance, but is a circumstance to be considered in determining the intent of the parties.—Romich v. Kempner Bros. Realty Co., supra.

On the other hand, particularly in view of the tendency to favor the tenant, see infra § 34, it is generally held that where fixtures are erected on and attached to real property by a tenant for a specific use connected with the occupancy during the leasehold term, and without any contrary agreement, they may be removed by the tenant, or by those lawfully claiming under him, during the term of the tenancy, provided the severance can be accomplished without material injury to the freehold.[30] The intent of the parties is a controlling criterion in ascertaining whether property supplied by the lessee retains its character as personalty and is removable by him;[31] the character of the annexation to the land and the use made of the property being subsidiarily employed for the purpose of testing the intention of the parties.[32] The fact that the tenant in removing an improvement placed on the freehold by him will not leave the premises in exactly the same condition as they were before he entered thereon is not controlling in determining whether he has the right to remove such improvement.[33] Although the right to remove fixtures may be, and frequently is, the subject of an express agreement between the landlord and tenant, see supra § 15, the tenant needs no express stipulation in the lease to give him the right to remove improvements which have not become a part of the freehold.[34]

Vault doors, etc.

(1) A vault door and frame, lock-boxes, burglar alarm, and marble, bronze, and wood fixtures in a bank were held not removable.—Greensburg Bank v. Department of Financial Institutions, Ind.App., 11 N.E.2d 1008.

(2) Likewise, wainscoting, vault, closet, and doors installed by bank tenant, but not a time lock door, were not removable.—Inge v. First State Bank of Denton, Tex.Civ.App., 57 S.W.2d 217, error dismissed.

(3) A vault door, however, has been held to be removable.—Bennett v. Taylor, 49 S.W.2d 608, 185 Ark. 794.

(4) Likewise, a bank vault and night depository were banking "trade fixtures."—President and Directors of Manhattan Co. v. Mosler Safe Co., 299 N.Y.S. 417, 252 App.Div. 863, appeal denied 13 N.E.2d 480, 277 N.Y. 740.

Attachment

The fact that, at commencement of suit by lessor he regarded property placed on leased premises as property of assignee of lease and procured an order of attachment against it, although not necessarily controlling, was relevant in determining whether the parties intended that on termination of lease the property should remain in assignee or whether it should become a part of the realty and vest in lessor.—American Rolling Mill Co. v. Carol Mining Co., 137 S.W.2d 725, 282 Ky. 64.

Giving and taking of chattel mortgage expresses an agreement and an intention of the parties that the property covered therein shall retain its character as personal property.—Ottawa Public Finance Corporation v. Blackley-Gould Corporation, 281 Ill.App. 447.

Question of intention

Whether fixtures on leased premises are removable is question of intention of landlord and tenant.—In re Shelar, D.C.Pa., 21 F.2d 136.

Subsequent statements

The fact that bank's statements and reports showed that bank was owner of certain fixtures did not divest articles of character of fixtures which they acquired at time of annexation to building.—Greensburg Bank v. Department of Financial Institutions, Ind.App., 11 N.E.2d 1008.

Mere fact of attachment does not determine whether it belongs to the owner of the fee or the tenant, as ownership depends on the manner of attachment and on the agreement of the parties, express or implied.—Prudential Ins. Co. of America v. Kaplan, 198 A. 68, 330 Pa. 33.

Articles not annexed by tenant. Articles which are on the leased premises at the time of the making of the lease, and which are mere chattels not a part of the realty, do not pass by a lease of the premises so as to entitle the tenant to the use thereof,[35] or to subject him to liability, under an agreement to deliver up the premises in good condition at the end of the term, for damage done to such articles.[36] On the other hand, a tenant does not have the right to remove fixtures on the premises at the time of the leasing thereof.[37]

§ 34. —— Tendency to Favor Tenant

The law is extremely indulgent to the tenant with respect to fixtures.

The general rule that whatever is affixed to the realty becomes part thereof does not obtain in its fullness as between landlord and tenant.[38] The law is extremely indulgent to the tenant with respect to fixtures,[39] and it has been held that to prevent removal of fixtures by a lessee, accession to the realty must affirmatively appear.[40] Indeed, it has been said that, as between landlord and tenant, more than in the case of any other relation, the greatest latitude and indulgence are to be allowed in favor of the tenant's claim to have particular articles considered as personal chattels rather than as part of the freehold or inheritance.[41] This tendency to favor the tenant may also arise from the character of the tenancy. Thus, it has been presumed, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, that it was not the intention of a tenant at will to enhance the value of the freehold, and that improvements placed thereon were for his own use and benefit, and that they should retain their character as personalty.[42]

§ 35. —— Statutory Provisions

The right of a tenant to remove fixtures placed by him on the leased premises is regulated in some jurisdictions by statute.

In several states there is a statutory provision that a tenant may remove from the demised premises at any time during the continuance of his term, anything affixed thereto for the purpose of trade, manufacture, ornament, or domestic use, if the removal can be effected without injury to the premises, unless the thing has, by the manner in which it is affixed, become an integral part of the prem-

Different test
The legal test by which a court may treat realty and a chattel attached thereto as a single whole, where both are owned by the annexor, is not necessarily the legal test by which a court would determine whether the separate owner of a chattel had lost it by a tenant's annexation to the freehold.—In re Theodore A. Kochs Co., C.C.A.Ill., 120 F.2d 603—26 C.J. p 695 note 21 [b] (1).

Founded on public policy

Law looks with favor
Where the question as to whether a chattel annexed to the freehold has become a part of the realty or otherwise arises between landlord and tenant, the law looks with favor on the right of the tenant to remove as personalty articles furnished or installed by him for the purposes of his occupancy, although they may ordinarily be deemed fixtures.—Handlan v. Stifel, Mo.App., 232 S.W. 245.

ises.[43] Occasionally, other statutory provisions exist bearing on the tenant's right of removal.[44]

§ 36. —— Removability as Based on Chattel Character of Article

The removability of articles annexed by a tenant to leased premises has been based by some decisions on the chattel character of the article.

An article annexed by the tenant under a lease has been not infrequently decided to be a chattel, in view more particularly of the apparent intention with which it was annexed.[45] As hereinafter pointed out in § 37, however, a removable fixture, while it is annexed to the realty, is in the twilight zone between real and personal property.

43. Agreement

Under Civ.Code § 1013, in order to warrant removal an agreement between the parties must be shown, but to make § 1019, which is set out in the text, applicable, no agreement for removal is necessary.—Roberts v. Mills, 205 P. 872, 56 Cal.App. 556.

Articles held removable under statute

(1) Pump and motor.—Societa Italiana di Mutua Beneficenza v. Burr, C.C.A.Cal., 71 F.2d 496.

(2) Pump station.—Kay County Gas Co. v. Bryant, 276 P. 218, 135 Okl. 135.

(3) Storage tank supported by timbers laid horizontally to build up base four or five feet high on leased automobile filling station premises.—Hedges v. First Nat. Bank, 39 P.2d 57, 170 Okl. 175.

(4) Other articles see 26 C.J. p 705 note 27 [a].

Articles held not removable under statute

(1) Show windows, decks, and shelving in building, which were attached to building with spikes, nails, bolts, and screws.—Hinkle v. Bass Furniture & Carpet Co., 246 P. 228, 117 Okl. 207.

(2) Other articles see 26 C.J. p 705 note 27 [b].

44. Things affixed

(1) Under some statutes, a thing is deemed to be affixed to land when it is attached to it by roots, or imbedded in it, or permanently resting on it, or is permanently attached to what is thus permanent, as by means of cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws.—Goldberg v. Stanton, 258 P. 417, 84 Cal.App. 665.

(2) A heavy refrigerator attached to a building by quarter-round molding tacked to ceiling is not such a fixture.—Goldberg v. Stanton, supra.

(3) A light plant in the basement of a farm dwelling, together with the necessary equipment, and a hay carrier system have been held to be annexed to the land within such a statute.—Klocke v. Troske, 222 N.W. 262, 57 N.D. 404.

In Georgia, Code § 3120, providing that a tenant, during the term or a continuation thereof, or while he is in possession under the landlord, may remove fixtures erected by him, is construed as giving a right to remove trade fixtures only.—Powell v. Griffith, 142 S.E. 466, 38 Ga.App. 40—26 C.J. p 705 note 28 [a].

In Louisiana

(1) Under Civ.Code § 2726, lessee may remove improvements and additions made by him, if he leaves the thing let in the condition in which he received it, but additions made with lime and cement the lessor may retain on paying a fair price.—Lighting Fixtures Supply Co. v. Fidelity Union Fire Ins. Co., C.C.A.La., 55 F.2d 110, certiorari denied 52 S.Ct. 641, 286 U.S. 558, 76 L.Ed. 1292—26 C.J. p 705 note 28 [b].

(2) Landlord does not acquire ownership of movables in leased premises merely because tenant owes rent.—Bladg v. Giacomino, 128 So. 661, 170 La. 638.

(3) For a movable to become an immovable by destination, it must necessarily by placed on, or attached to, the immovable by the owner himself. When such things are placed on an immovable by a lessee as an improvement or addition, they remain movables, and may be carried away by him unless attached with lime and cement.—Richardson v. Item Co., 134 So. 380, 172 La. 421.

(4) Building owner, if intending to sell sprinkler system with building, could convey no title thereto, where sprinkler was installed and owned by lessee.—Richardson v. Item Co., supra.

(5) The provision in statute entitled "An Act To grant the right to mortgage movable property," etc., making it lawful to place a chattel mortgage on buildings on leased ground, does not impliedly repeal statute under which buildings on leased ground are immovables, in absence of anything to indicate such legislative intent.—Buchler v. Fourroux, 190 So. 640, 193 La. 445.

In Montana

(1) Under Rev.Codes 1935 § 6670, sluiceboxes, flumes, hose, pipes, railway tracks, cars, blacksmith shops, mills and all other machinery or tools used in working or developing a mine are to be deemed affixed to the mine. A dredge used in placer gold mining was "mining machinery," as respects a lessee's right of removal. Whether the lessee was entitled to remove the dredge depends on the intention of the parties, due consideration being given to the effect of the statute.—Story Gold Dredging Co. v. Wilson, 76 P.2d 73, 106 Mont. 166.

(2) A railroad company, the predecessors of which furnished materials from which a mining company constructed a spur track on its property without any agreement as to ownership thereof, was not a tenant of the mining company within such statute.—Helena & Livingston Smelting & Reduction Co. v. Northern Pac. Ry. Co., 205 P. 224, 62 Mont. 281, 21 A.L.R. 1080.

Bowling alleys and racks installed by tenant in their nature may be pure chattels instead of either trade fixtures or irremovable parts of realty.—Nadien v. Bazata, 22 N.E.2d 1, 303 Mass. 496.

Things held chattels

(1) Buildings, usually not strongly attached to the soil.—School Dist. No. 11, Laramie County v. Donahue, 97 P.2d 663, 55 Wyo. 220—26 C.J. p 696 note 26 [a] (1).

(2) Electric light and gas fixtures of small value and simple character.—O'Donal v. Aurentz, 235 S.W. 826, 210 Mo.App. 641.

(3) Lunch stand on wheels.—Gray v. Crowell, 108 So. 239, 214 Ala. 425.

(4) Ordinary movable office furniture.—Colton v. Michigan Lafayette Bldg. Co., 255 N.W. 433, 267 Mich. 122.

(5) Portable garage.—Hanson v. Ryan, 201 N.W. 749, 185 Wis. 566, 36 A.L.R. 1516.

(6) Safe which was not attached to building and was movable at pleasure on its rollers with no injury to building.—Cozart v. Johnson, 182 S.E. 502, 505, 181 Ga. 337, citing Corpus Juris.

(7) Water tank, pump, and engine placed on leased premises by tenant after destruction by windstorm.—Frederick v. Smith, 111 So. 847, 147 Miss. 437.

(8) Other objects see 26 C.J. p 696 note 26 [a].

As discussed infra § 41, the right to remove chattels from the leased premises is not lost by a failure to remove them within the time during which fixtures may be removed.

§ 37. —— Removable Fixtures as Realty or Personalty

It seems that fixtures which are removable by a tenant are a part of the realty until removed.

The question frequently arises whether fixtures, which are removable by the tenant who has annexed them, are, before removal, to be regarded as part of the realty or as personalty. Courts have generally refrained from attempting to lay down fixed and definite rules for determining their legal character,[46] and it has been said that such fixtures are a species of property which are the dividing line, or the twilight zone, between real and personal property.[47] Frequently, where their precise legal character is not in issue, the courts speak of such fixtures as being personalty, and without discussion of the question, apparently considering that this status necessarily follows from the fact that they are removable.[48] Similarly, where no right of removal exists, the articles annexed have been spoken of as a part of the realty.[49] Strictly speaking, it would seem that removable fixtures, like other fixtures, are part of the realty until removed; the right to remove them existing in the tenant's favor apart from, and independently of, his unquestioned right to remove any article which, although on the land, has not become a part thereof for any purpose, that is, which is a mere personal chattel.[50] The view that removable fixtures are chattels seems incompatible[51] with the rule, hereinafter discussed in § 41, that the tenant loses his right to remove fixtures, but not mere chattels not constituting fixtures, if he fails to remove them from the leased premises within the proper time. The view that a removable fixture is a part of the land has been applied in connection with the appropriation of land for public use, it being decided that the fixture was part of the land for which payment must be made by the appropriator, the payment going to the tenant by reason of his right of removal.[52] It has also been decided that a mortgage by lessee of all the personalty on the premises did not cover trade fixtures or fixtures removable by the tenant under an express stipulation.[53] If regarded as personalty, the articles annexed may be transferred or mortgaged as such by the tenant,[54] while if regarded as part of the land, they cannot, in some states, be so disposed of.[55]

Whether removable fixtures of a tenant are subject to attachment is considered in Attachment § 74 a (1), and the liability of a tenant to his landlord for damages to the freehold from the removal of fixtures in the C.J.S. title Landlord and Tenant § 260, also 35 C.J. p 1222 note 82.

On transfer of land. In jurisdictions where removable fixtures are regarded as part of the land, a transfer of the land by the lessor will pass title to the fixtures, unless they are expressly excepted therefrom;[56] and a transferee by the lessee of his interest in the land will also pass a like interest in the fixtures, together with his right of removal.[57]

Regarding removable fixtures as personal property, on the other hand, a lease of the land by the lessor does not include the fixtures.[58] There are occasional decisions which, it is conceived, are not entirely consistent in this respect, they regarding the removable fixture as part of the land for the purpose of a conveyance thereof, but regarding it as personalty for other purposes.[59] A sale of fixtures to a person taking or having an interest in the land, such as the landlord, is regarded as in the nature of an abandonment or waiver of the right of removal, and need not be in writing to avoid the operation of the statute of frauds.[60]

Rights as to fixtures between vendor and purchaser generally are discussed infra §§ 43–51.

§ 38. —— Trade Fixtures

a. In general
b. What are trade fixtures

a. In General

A tenant ordinarily has the right to remove, during his term, trade fixtures placed by him on the leased premises.

Articles annexed to the realty by a tenant for the purpose of carrying on a trade are ordinarily removable by him during his term,[61] and this has been held to be the case when the annexation was made by the lessor, before the lessee's entry, at the request of the latter and at his expense.[62] That the fixture is particularly adapted to the particular type of building in which it is placed has been stated not to make it irremovable;[63] but, where the article was not placed in the building for the sole purpose of enabling the tenant to transact his business, but to make the building structure itself peculiarly adapted as a particular type of building, the article is not removable as a trade fixture.[64] It is not material that, if the fixture is removed, the landlord will be unable to collect the rent.[65]

The question whether an improvement remains as a removable trade fixture is frequently said to be one of intent.[66] Occasionally the courts, in discussing the question of the tenant's right to remove an article annexed for purposes of trade, use language to the effect that there is no right of removal if the tenant made the annexation with the intention that it should be permanent, but that there is such right if the intention was of a contrary character.[67] Occasionally the courts refer, in this connection, to the intention, not of the tenant alone, but of the parties or of the tenant and landlord.[68]

The purpose of the rule allowing a tenant to remove as a trade fixture what has apparently become affixed to the land is for the encouragement of trade and industry.[69] Occasionally it has been said to be based on the presumption of an intention on the part of the tenant to remove the article annexed.[70] It has been said that, in the absence of an express contract on the subject, there is an implied contract that the tenant may remove trade fixtures at a proper time and in a proper manner.[71]

As a general rule, a tenant has no right to remove a trade fixture if its removal would substantially injure the freehold,[72] but, of course, in order to preclude a removal, the injury which would result must be substantial.[73] It has been held that, if the fixture is so attached that it cannot be removed without substantial damage to the property, it tends to show an intention to make it a part of the realty.[74] So, also, if the damage caused by its removal is disproportionate to the value of the fixture itself, it tends in the same direction.[75] It has been said, however, that "it is difficult to conceive that any fixture, however solid, permanent, and closely attached to the realty, placed there for the mere purposes of trade, may not be removed at the end of the term."[76] To determine whether the removal would involve an injury to the freehold, the condition in which the premises would be left by the removal is to be compared with their condition at the time of annexation, and the removal is not allowable if, to make the annexation, the premises were altered or cut away, and the removal of the fixture would leave the premises in a maimed or unfinished condition.[77] The fact that the tenant is willing, at his own expense, to restore the premises to their former condition, or that provision was made for such restoration, has been considered in determining the removability of trade fixtures,[78] but the fact that the tenant offers to repair all damages which he may cause by the act of removal is not of itself determinative of his right.[79]

That the fixture must be taken in pieces in order to be removed does not exclude the right of removal.[80] It has been said, however, that the fixture must be such as to be capable of removal without losing its essential character as a chattel,[81] and by occasional decisions, the tenant cannot remove a trade fixture, if the removal will result in the destruction of the fixture or its reduction to a mere mass of crude materials.[82] Opposed to such a view, however, are a number of cases in which, without any reference to this consideration, a brick or stone structure has been regarded as removable by the tenant,[83] and the view referred to has been expressly repudiated,[84] as has the view that the right of removal is excluded by the fact that removal would injure the article removed,[85] which has been asserted.[86]

Identity of purpose. That a fixture was erected in a building with a view to its use in the same business for which the landlord had erected the building has been held not to affect the right of removal, the building being available for other purposes.[87]

Substituted fixtures. A fixture substituted by the tenant for another fixture, which was on the premises at the time of the making of the lease, cannot ordinarily be removed by him, if the original fixture has been injured or permanently removed, since the effect of the removal of the substituted fixture would be to leave the premises in worse condition than when he took the lease.[88] A replacement of articles destroyed or rendered useless by a storm, when there was no obligation on the tenant to replace them, is not a substitution, but an addition of articles which he has a right to remove.[89]

b. What Are Trade Fixtures

An article may generally be regarded as a trade fixture if it is annexed for the purpose of aiding in the conduct by the tenant of a calling exercised on the leased premises for the purpose of pecuniary profit.

The general principles applicable to the question of trade fixtures are well settled, but the courts have experienced much difficulty in applying them to variant fact situations, and, as a result, it may be said that what constitutes a "trade fixture" depends on the facts of the particular case.[90]

As a general rule, an article may be regarded as a trade fixture if annexed for the purpose of aiding in the conduct by the tenant of a calling exercised on the leased premises for the purpose of pecuniary profit,[91] and that the article has also the qualities of a domestic or agricultural fixture is immaterial in this regard.[92] To constitute any chattel that has been attached to the freehold a "trade fixture," it is only necessary that it be devoted to what is known as a trade purpose, and the form or size of the annexed chattel is immaterial.[93] grown by a nursery man or market gardener for sale[1] have all been regarded as trade fixtures in particular cases, and as therefore removable. A building erected merely for the purpose of leasing has been held not to be removable as a trade fixture;[2] and a like view has been taken of a building which, although erected for use by the tenant in connection with his business, was afterward leased by him to another for other purposes,[3] and also of a dwelling erected by the tenant for his own occupation, on premises utilized by him for the most part for manufacturing purposes.[4] Even a house and barn erected on the leased premises in order to facilitate their use as a game preserve have been regarded as trade fixtures.[5] A permanent pavement,[6] electric wiring in a building,[7] and alterations of a building, attached with nails, spikes, bolts, and screws,[8] have been held not to be trade fixtures.

§ 39. —— Agricultural Fixtures

Agricultural fixtures placed on leased premises by a tenant are usually removable by him during his term.

As a general rule a tenant may remove agricultural fixtures which have been affixed by him to the leased premises for his personal use or comfort.[9] This right of removal is based on the ground that it is a matter of public policy to encourage tenants to improve property for agricultural purposes as well as for trade purposes.[10] Likewise, an article annexed to a farm for the purpose of putting agricultural products in form or condition for the market has been regarded as removable as a trade fixture.[11] On the other hand, agricultural equipment which is permanently affixed to the land has been held not to be removable by the tenant.[12] It has also been held that an agricultural fixture is not removable if it was annexed without any intention on the part of the tenant to remove it,[13] and the matter of intention has been referred to as determinative of whether a structure, in that case a barn, was an agricultural fixture as having been intended to be such.[14]

§ 40. —— Domestic and Ornamental Fixtures

A tenant may remove domestic and ornamental fixtures placed by him on the leased premises.

The tenant under a lease may remove what are known as domestic and ornamental fixtures, these being articles annexed to a dwelling in order to render it more comfortable and attractive as such.[15] This exception in favor of the tenant is based on public policy and convenience to permit the tenant to make the most profitable and comfortable use of the premises demised, that can be obtained consistently with the rights of the owner of the freehold.[16]

The right to remove domestic and ornamental fixtures is subject to the limitation which prevails as regards trade fixtures, see supra § 38, that the removal is not permissible if it will cause substantial damage to the freehold,[17] and that an article or structure was substituted by the tenant for one there at the time of the lease may also be a reason for denying the right to remove it.[18] It has been held that a domestic or ornamental fixture is not removable if its removal involves its disintegration.[19] It has also been held that a domestic or ornamental fixture is not removable if it is so affixed as to become permanently incorporated with the land or structure to which it is attached.[20]

There have been quite a number of decisions as to whether particular articles were to be regarded as domestic fixtures or ornamental fixtures, for the purpose of removal by the tenant.[21]

§ 41. —— Time of Removal and Loss of Rights by Tenant

A tenant who fails timely to remove fixtures from leased premises loses his right thereto.

The tenant's failure to remove fixtures within the proper time is generally held to have the effect of vesting title thereto irrevocably in the landlord.[22] In some cases the tenant has been deemed to forfeit his fixtures by reason of his breach of an implied condition of his tenancy.[23] In other cases, the tenant is deemed to have abandoned the fixtures by his failure to remove them.[24] Of course, the tenant, or one claiming under him, does not, by neglecting to remove them within the proper time for removal of fixtures, lose the right to remove chattels on the land which are not affixed thereto or which are not of such a character as to become fixtures.[25]

The question of the time at which the tenant must exercise his right of removal has frequently been the subject of consideration. In some cases it is stated that the removal must be made during the term,[26] or before the expiration of the term,[27] in others, that the right expires with the tenancy,[28] and in still others, that it may be exercised a "reasonable time" after the expiration of the term.[29] A number of cases recognize the right of the tenant to remove fixtures even after the term, provided he does so before he relinquishes possession of the land, it being said in some that he may make the removal before the relinquishment of possession,[30] and in others that he must do so.[31] This rule is based on the theory that, as long as the tenant remains in possession, the presumption that he has abandoned the fixtures cannot arise.[32] In some jurisdictions, in order for a tenant to have the right to remove fixtures after the expiration of his term and while he is still in possession, the possession must be held under a right still to be considered the tenant of the lessor,[33] or during what may, for this purpose, be considered as an "excrescence on the term."[34] In some jurisdictions the tenant's continued possession may, with other circumstances, tend to prove a waiver of the landowner's rights, but does not ipso facto extend the tenant's privilege of removing fixtures.[35] On the other hand, it has been held that a tenant may remove trade fixtures after the expiration of his term and after he has relinquished possession, although he may be liable as a trespasser on the soil and for breaking the close.[36] Where a removable fixture is considered as personalty, see supra § 37, if the tenant yields possession and leaves the structure standing, such fact may be evidence that it was not used or intended except for the purpose of trade or manufacture, or may be evidence of abandonment of it, but it cannot change the established character of the property so as to defeat his right to remove it.[37] Of course, a tenant holding over by permission, that is, rightfully, retains the right of removal.[38]

Extension of time for removal. The landlord may expressly stipulate or consent that the tenant may remove the fixtures even after the end of the term or his relinquishment of possession,[39] and such stipulation or consent may be either oral or in writing.[40]

If the landlord, by his conduct or language, induces the tenant to leave the fixtures on the premises for some particular purpose,[41] as, for instance, that they may be sold for him by the landlord,[42] or with a view to pending negotiations looking toward their purchase by the landlord,[43] the latter cannot claim the fixtures by reason of the delay in removal so induced by him.

some cases, there has been an enforcement by the landlord of the forfeiture,[45] as by a reëntry [46] or a summary proceeding.[47] There are, however, cases to the effect that the tenant has, even after his loss of possession by forfeiture, a reasonable time in which to remove fixtures.[48] Under a reservation in a lease giving the lessee a right to remove his equipment within a stipulated period after the termination of the lease, the right of removal exists when the lease is forfeited to the same extent as it does in case it is terminated by lapse of time.[49]

New lease or agreement. By the weight of authority, the tenant, by accepting from the landlord a new lease, which contains no mention of fixtures annexed by him during the tenancy under the previous lease, loses his right to remove such fixtures, the theory being that, the fixtures being a part of the land, the tenant, by accepting the new lease, acquires only such an interest in the fixtures as he does in the land, a merely temporary interest.[50]

There are, however, a number of cases in which such doctrine is repudiated,[51] and it has been held that the execution of a new lease without a reservation of the right of the tenant to remove fixtures placed on the demised premises under a prior lease does not ipso facto deprive him of the right of removal at the expiration of the new lease.[52] The minority rule would seem properly to control in any jurisdiction in which fixtures, because removable by the tenant, are regarded as personalty, since as such they would not be covered by the new lease, in terms of the land only.[53] In several cases the majority rule appears to have been regarded as inapplicable to the trade fixtures there in question, because not a part of the realty, although conceded to be applicable to trade fixtures which are a part of the realty,[54] thus suggesting a classification of trade fixtures which does not appear to be recognized in other connections. There are statutes providing in terms that the tenant's right to remove fixtures shall not be impaired by acceptance of a new lease.[55] Of course, a provision in the new lease reserving the right of removal will be effective for that purpose,[56] and even in the absence of any express provision in this regard, the understanding of the parties that the right of removal shall continue, inferred from the circumstances of the case, has been regarded as sufficient to protect the tenant's rights.[57] That the new lease contains a covenant by the lessee to yield up the premises at the end of the term in as good condition as at the time of the lease, or an equivalent covenant, has been not infrequently referred to, in this connection, as a consideration of greater or less weight adverse to the right of removal.[58]

The applicability of the majority rule has been viewed as dependent on whether the right of con-

In New Jersey, while recognizing that structural fixtures would pass to the landlord on the execution of a new lease without a title reservation to the tenant, it has been held that the rule does not apply to store fixtures.—Greenspan-Greenberger Co. v. Goerke Co., 162 A. 87, 111 N.J.Eq. 249.

55. In Maryland, under Pub.Code Gen.L. art 53 § 28, assignee of original lessee, and owner of fixtures under transfer from him, being the accepted tenant of lessors, is not required to remove the fixtures at expiration of the tenancy under the original lease, or to reserve its rights therein by any provision inserted in the lease subsequently executed.—Rasch v. tinued possession is given orally or in writing.[59] It has also been held that a mere extension or renewal of the old lease does not deprive the tenant of the right to remove fixtures,[60] although, it has been held, to the contrary, that a mere holding over by consent does deprive the tenant of his right of removal.[61] Occasionally, the fact that a lease was made during a preëxisting tenancy, and not at the end thereof, appears to have been regarded as tending to deprive it of the character of a new lease for the purpose of the rule, at least where it is apparent that the parties did not intend the transaction to constitute a new leasing.[62]

In analogy to the doctrine that the tenant loses the right of removal by taking a new lease of the premises, he has been held to have lost such right when he took a contract for the sale to him of the premises, which he failed to carry out.[63]

Removal prevented by landlord. If the landlord prevents the tenant, by legal process or otherwise, from removing fixtures which he is entitled to remove, the time for removal is extended until removal becomes possible.[64]

It has been asserted that if the tenancy is "wrongfully terminated" by the landlord and the tenant is ousted, the latter has a reasonable time within which to remove the fixtures annexed by him.[65] It has also been held that the tenant may remove removable fixtures after his term has expired if he was deprived of the opportunity to remove them by a wrongful retaking of possession of the premises by the landlord.[66]

Surrender or merger of leasehold. By surrendering his unexpired leasehold estate to the landlord, the tenant loses his right to remove fixtures annexed by him,[67] and a surrender by operation of law is as effective for this purpose, it seems, as an express surrender;[68] nor is it material that, after the surrender, the tenant under the original lease acquires a new lease of the same premises from the same landlord; the right of removal is not thereby revived.[69] As hereinafter discussed in § 42, a surrender is not effective, however, to prevent removal by one to whom the fixtures had previously been transferred.

When a merger of the leasehold occurs, without a surrender, as by a conveyance of the reversion by the landlord to the tenant, there is ordinarily no room for question as to the right to remove the fixtures, there being but one party in interest. It may, however, be shown that the conveyance of the reversion was merely by way of security, and that consequently there was no merger of the leasehold, preventing removal of the fixtures by the lessee or one claiming under him.[70]

Tenancy of uncertain duration. In the case of a tenancy of uncertain duration, such as a tenancy at will, or one subject to termination on a named contingency, the tenant has, it has been said, a "reasonable time" after the termination of the tenancy in which to make the removal,[71] provided, it seems, he has not in the meanwhile relinquished possession.[72] In some jurisdictions this rule has been applied in the case of a tenancy under a lease made by a life tenant, which comes to an end by reason of the life tenant's death,[73] but in other jurisdictions the tenant under the lease is not allowed thereafter to remove the fixtures annexed by him, as against the remainderman.[74] The rule has been regarded as not applying when the notice necessary to terminate the tenancy is of such length that the tenant, after its receipt would have sufficient time for removal of the fixture.[75]

§ 42. —— Right of Removal by or against Third Persons

a. Persons claiming under tenant
b. Against person other than lessor

a. Persons Claiming under Tenant

Ordinarily a person claiming under the tenant has the same, but no greater, right to remove fixtures as possessed by the tenant.

The right to remove a fixture annexed by the tenant may be exercised by one to whom the tenant, after making the annexation, has undertaken to transfer the fixture, either absolutely [76] or by way of mortgage.[77] In determining whether something attached to realty has become a part of it, as between landlord and tenant, the intention with which the article was annexed is of paramount importance, see supra § 33, but, where the controversy is between the lessor of the premises and general creditors of the lessee, the question of intention is only of incidental importance, and the ultimate issue between the contesting parties is to be determined with more particular emphasis on the character of the annexation and the uses and purposes of the property or chattels annexed.[78]

A creditor or other person claiming under the tenant has ordinarily no right of removal if the tenant would not have such right.[79] Accordingly, although a buyer of removable fixtures is entitled to a reasonable time within the term of the lease to remove such fixtures,[80] if the tenant would have no right of removal owing to the expiration of the tenancy or his relinquishment of possession, one to whom he has sold [81] or mortgaged [82] the article would not have such right. Where the tenant was not the owner of the chattel annexed, however, it has been held that his failure to remove such chattel from the premises within a reasonable time after the termination of his tenancy did not deprive the owner of the chattel of his right thereto.[83]

In some jurisdictions, as the tenant loses the right of removal by the acceptance of a new lease, see supra § 41, so a person claiming under him may do so,[84] and it has been decided that such a transferee of the tenant loses his right of removal if his transferor, while still in possession of the premises, takes a new lease.[85] The rule has even been applied as against a sublessee who, after making annexations, took a new lease from the original lessor.[86]

Agreement with third person. As already discussed supra § 20, if the tenant annexes a chattel procured by him from a third person under an agreement that the title shall remain in the latter, or on which he has given a mortgage to a third person, the rights of such third person take precedence of any right which the landlord may have to claim the article annexed.

That the leasehold is surrendered by the tenant does not, by the weight of authority, affect the right of removal by one to whom the fixture has previously been transferred or mortgaged,[87] or by one who owns the chattel and has leased it to the tenant,[88] and under such circumstances he has a reasonable time to remove the property from the leased premises.[89] There is, however, authority for

Intention and notice
The giving of a chattel mortgage to become due at a future date on the fixtures in stone quarry leased from lessor was evidence that lessee considered property personalty, and due execution and recording of mortgage were "implied notice" to lessor of such claim.—Hopgood v. a contrary view.[90] On the analogy of the decisions above referred to, that one claiming under the tenant does not lose his right of removal by reason of the tenant's surrender, it has been held that he does not lose such right by reason of a forfeiture in favor of the landlord based on a voluntary act by the tenant;[91] but here also there is authority to the contrary.[92]

Statutory lien of vendor of chattel sold to the tenant and by him annexed has been regarded as taking priority over the claim of the landlord to such article, on his reëntry for breach of a condition.[93]

b. Against Person Other than Lessor

A tenant ordinarily has the same right to remove fixtures against one claiming under the landlord as he would have had against the landlord.

The right to remove a trade fixture may be asserted as against a transferee of the reversion, taking with notice that the fixture was annexed by the tenant.[94] Conversely, a purchaser of the reversion should not be affected by a right of removal in a tenant if he purchased without notice of such right.[95] Presumably, in those states in which it is the law that one who has, by agreement, the right to remove articles annexed by him to another's land may exercise such right as against a purchaser of the land, even though the latter is without notice of the agreement, see supra § 18, the right of a tenant to remove fixtures, as against a purchaser of the reversion, is independent of the question of notice.[96]

The possession of the tenant has been regarded as charging the purchaser with notice of rights of removal in the former,[97] but there are to be found occasional cases to a contrary effect.[98] Where there is no reference in a written lease to an agreement between the landlord and tenant giving the tenant the right to remove fixtures, it has been held that, even though, under the statutes in the jurisdiction, occupancy by a tenant holding under a lease is notice to one purchasing from the landlord, it is not notice of the right on the part of the tenant to remove permanent fixtures placed on the premises by the tenant before the sale by the landlord.[99]

Lapse of time, or other circumstances, which would deprive the tenant of the right of removal as against the lessor, will deprive him of such right as against the lessor's transferee.[1]

Claimant under mortgage prior to annexation. As against one claiming under a mortgage of the reversion prior to the annexation of an article by the tenant under a lease, where the mortgagor is not prohibited from leasing, the lessee has been regarded as entitled to remove such article either under an agreement for removal, see supra § 19, or by reason of its being a trade fixture,[2] provided at least the removal does not affect the security of the mortgage.[3] On the other hand, improvements placed on the premises by the lessee which are of such a character that they are not removable by him as against the lessor become subject to the lien of the mortgage.[4] As regards a tenant holding under a lease subsequent to the mortgage, it would seem that, if a mortgagor is, after the making of the mortgage, unable himself to remove fixtures, see infra § 49, he should not be able, by the making of a lease, to enable another to do so.[5] By the strict rule of the common law, the legal title being in the mortgagee, a lease by the mortgagor, made after the mortgage, is a nullity, and cannot, it would seem, confer on the tenant thereunder any rights of removal as such.[6]

Claimant under mortgage subsequent to annexation. As against one to whom the reversion is mortgaged after annexation of the article in question, the tenant can remove it, provided at least the mortgagee took with notice of the right of removal;[7] and he would have the same right as against a purchaser at a sale under foreclosure of the mortgage.[8] On the other hand, particularly where the lease expressly provides that it shall be subject to any mortgage which shall be placed on the premises, the lessee is not entitled to remove fixtures which were intended to become permanently a part of the realty and which were annexed prior to the mortgage.[9]

Effect of merger of leasehold. Where the reversion on a leasehold is subject to a mortgage, the acquisition by one person of both the reversion and the leasehold interest would seem to operate, by way of merger of the leasehold, to subject to the mortgage fixtures previously annexed by the lessee, provided they can be regarded as part of the realty,[10] while, if not regarded as part of the realty, they would not appear to be so subject to the prior mortgage on the reversion.[11]

§ 43. Between Mortgagor and Mortgagee or Vendor and Purchaser of Land and Their Privies

As between a mortgagor and mortgagee or vendor and purchaser of land, the usual tests in determining whether an article has become a fixture are annexation, adaptation, and intention to make the annexation permanent.

The general rules as to what constitutes fixtures are discussed supra §§ 1–11. In deciding whether an article used in connection with real property should be considered as a fixture and a part and parcel of the land, as between a mortgagor and mortgagee or vendor and purchaser of the land, the usual tests are real or constructive annexation of the article to the realty; appropriation or adaptation to the use or purpose of the realty with which it is connected; and the intention to make the annexation permanent.[12] The manner of annexation of chattels to realty is not controlling on the question as to whether they constitute fixtures, but the purpose and intent of annexation are the most important considerations.[13]

The rule for determining what is a fixture is construed strongly against the mortgagor or vendor and in favor of the mortgagee or purchaser,[14] whereas, as shown supra § 34, in the case of landlord and tenant the tendency is to hold that chattels are not a part of the realty. Many chattels are held to be fixtures, as between mortgagor and mortgagee or vendor and purchaser, which do not lose their character of personal chattels when the question is between landlord and tenant.[15]

§ 44. —— Annexation before Conveyance or Mortgage in General

In the absence of an agreement or statute otherwise providing, chattels previously annexed to, and structures erected on, land pass with the land on a conveyance or mortgage thereof.

In determining whether an article or structure placed on land is a part thereof for the purpose of a mortgage, the same considerations apply as in determining whether such an article or structure passes by an absolute conveyance of the land,[16] and in determining either question, the same general rule applies, it is said, as applies between heir and personal representative,[17] not that as between landlord and tenant,[18] that what is annexed to the realty will pass as a part thereof.[19] Consequently, in the absence of an agreement or statute otherwise providing, it may be said that chattels previously annexed to, and structures previously erected on, land pass with the land on a conveyance or mortgage thereof,[20] and the grantor or mortgagor may not

Time as of which character of property determined

In action by former possessor against mortgagee to recover bowling alleys which were located in mortgaged building, the character of the alleys as realty or personalty should be determined as of the date when they were placed in the building.—Lesser v. remove, or otherwise dispose of, such chattels without the consent of the grantee or mortgagee.[21] On the other hand, if chattels on the land are not part of the realty, they do not, under the law of fixtures, pass with the land on a conveyance or mortgage thereof.[22]

It is to be recognized that the primary consideration in determining whether an article on land, annexed or not annexed, is covered by a conveyance or mortgage is one of the intention of the parties, as determined by a construction of the language of the instrument in question.[23] The parties may, as between themselves, agree that the chattel shall not pass by conveyance or mortgage.[24] However, the right of removal by the grantor pursuant to an agreement with the grantee may be lost by failure to exercise it within a reasonable time.[25]

A purchaser at foreclosure sale stands in the same position as the original mortgagee as regards articles annexed to the land by the mortgagor or other owner of the land.[26]

Trade fixtures. Trade fixtures pass with the land on a conveyance thereof,[27] and the grantor is without any right of removal as against the grantee.[28]

Mortgage of leasehold. A mortgage by the tenant of his leasehold interest covers articles annexed to the freehold which he has the right to remove as against his landlord.[29]

§ 45. —— Specific Articles and Structures
